

CITIZENS' NATIONAL BANK

MADE COUNTY DEPOSITORY.

At the last meeting of the county board the Citizens' National bank of this city was made the depository for the county funds, they having outbid their contemporaries up the line just a trifle. For six years past the county money has been kept at Marshfield. Part of the year there is quite a bunch of money in the county treasury, and then there are times when there is less than none, so that it will not make any marked difference to the public in general where the money is. The bank that handles the money has to give a bond in the sum of $50,000 to insure the county against loss.

ATTENTION, BUSINESS MEN.

There will be a meeting of the business men of Grand Rapids and the potato growers tributary to Grand Rapids at the West Side City Hall on Friday evening, Nov. 28, to devise ways and means to induce the Wisconsin Potato Growers' association to hold their 1914 annual convention at Grand Rapids. Come yourself and bring a neighbor.

ELKS HOLD A SOCIAL

SESSION TUESDAY EVENING.

About one hundred and fifty Elks assembled at their hall on Tuesday evening to participate in the annual convention-feel and social, and that they had a good time goes without saying. Quite a banquet had been prepared by those in charge of the affair, and the assembled members sat down about eight o'clock and when they got thru it was approaching the midnight hour very closely. Otto Roenius acted as toastmaster, a position which he filled in a most acceptable manner. Among the guests from out of town were Judge John C. Karel of Milwaukee and T. H. Hanna of Stevens Point. Both of these gentlemen spoke during the evening, in as they are both good talkers, their remarks were appreciated very much. There were also short talks by M. H. Jackson, L. M. Nash, Geo. L. Williams, W. H. Carey and others, all of which contributed toward the pleasure of the evening.

Music was furnished by the Elks orchestra consisting of Hugh Gogins on the violin, Cleve Akey on the piano, G. D. Fritschinger on the cornet and Dr. C. F. Bandelin on the clarinet. Messrs. Normington and Mulroy sang several selections, and taken altogether it was one of the most enthusiastic gatherings that has ever been held by the local lodge.

CHARGED WITH STEALING

AT NORTHWESTERN DEPOT.

If E. Christofsky was arrested on Monday and taken before Justice Brown on a charge of stealing merchandise from the Northwestern depot in this city. An adjournment was taken until Friday of this week when the case will come up again.

Two other young fellows have been arrested on the same charge and placed in jail, but as yet have not had their hearing. It seems that there has been a lot of petty pilfering from cars and about the depot at this point for some time, so Detective Welch came here to look the matter up and succeeded in catching some of those who are accused of the theft.

Imaginary Heart Trouble

Do you have pains in the region of the heart? Does your heart thump? Its terrible pounding greatly alarms you? What is wrong? Do you believe these symptoms mean heart trouble? Organic diseases of the heart very seldom occasion such pain, but are deadly and deadly. Nine-tenths of the pains supposed to be in the heart, are either in or caused by some derangement of the stomach. Often a dyspeptic imagines he has heart disease.

NEW POWER PLANT
ABOUT COMPLETED

The power plant of the Centralia Pulp and Paper Power company, which has been in course of construction during the past summer, is rapidly nearing completion, and if nothing unforeseen happens the plant will be in full operation next week. There are still some finishing touches to put on, but all of the machinery is installed and has been running to a limited extent since Monday.

When the mill belonging to this company was built, paper mills on the Wisconsin river were in its infancy, and the old original mill was not much of a masterpiece either in architectural beauty or handiness as paper mills go nowadays, but if anybody imagines that the present plant was modeled after the old one in any way, they are mistaken.

The new power house is constructed of a deep red brick with a rough surface and presents a most handsome appearance, and is a great relief from the sameness and monotony suggested by the average manufacturing building where the aim is to get up almost any kind of a building in the most rapid and substantial manner possible regardless of the appearance.

The interior of the building is enameled in battleship gray, trimmed with black and is light and cheerful in appearance in every way. When completed the building will also have a tile floor, which at the present time has not been put in.

The building contains four large generators of approximately 2400 horse-power each, a total of 2400 horse-power. The current will be generated at 2300 volts, but before leaving the plant will be stepped up to 15,000 volts, at which voltage it will be conveyed to the Eastern States where it will be utilized in the Nekeosha-Ewards plant, after being stepped down to the voltage at which they want it.

Besides the four large generators there are two excitors, one of which is operated by a water wheel and the other by electric power, and it will only be necessary to operate the water driven exciter in starting up the plant, the other one taking care of this part of the work once the plant is in operation. The generators are of the vertical type, each dynamo being located right over the wheel that operates it, the immense affairs being supported by a bearing at the top. They are practically noiseless in operation and it is hard to realize when standing near one of them that they are developing so much power. The fact that they revolve at a speed of only 90 revolutions per minute adds greatly to the illusion.

There is also in the dynamo room a cooling crane of 20,000 pounds capacity, and with the use of this it is possible for one man to pick up any piece of machinery in the room and convey it to any part of the building without any apparent effort. The big generators were installed by the Allis Chalmers company under the direction of Mr. Hathaway, while the switchboard was put in by the General Electric company under the direction of Mr. Whistling. The switchboard is quite an elaborate affair and is so arranged that the entire plant can be operated right from the board at all times. There are many automatic devices, and everything in the plant is right up to the minute. For the benefit of Chief Electrician McGrogan a green light has been mounted on the top of each generator, Mac having explained to the Tribune man that to his notion green was one of the most beautiful colors in existence.

The raising of the dam at the south side during the past year has greatly increased the power at that point, and the four wheels will not use near all that is available at that point, and the excess will be employed in grinding pulp. The company now has the pulp mill about ready to start up and it is expected that this branch of the concern will be in operation within a few days.

Men who have inspected the new plant pronounce it to be one of the most up to date on the river, and its appearance is certainly all that could be desired. The big wheels were started up on Monday and have been in operation at slow speed almost continuously ever since, but it is not the intention to put the load onto them until they are thoroughly dried out to guard against any possible accident on account of moisture that may have accumulated during transportation or while being installed.

Don't Scold the Telephone Girl.
In the Easter Sunday news last spring one of the features was the heroism of the telephone girls at Omaha. "As long as there was a wire they stayed at their posts," shortly afterward the same story of courage and loyalty was told in the Dayton Road, and again, in a West Virginia valley. But there is a heroism at the telephone board in the local setting of the day's hard work which is quite as admirable as the valor displayed under the more dramatic circumstances. Ordinarily, though, we do not hear about it; there is nothing of news value, for instance, in the fact that a telephone girl has had to quit because of poor health. Another takes her place and the service goes on. But when we read the physician's judgment in the death certificate that overwork and nervous prostration compared with consumption to kill this telephone girl, and that she was twenty years old when she died, there is something of a text. And the sermon is easily preached—indeed it preaches itself. It is a plea for consideration for the telephone girl. It is a nerve-wearing work she does. No word of commendation can be spoken when the work is well done, but the operator is exposed to continuous exposure to moisture that is quite occasionally the warty and abuse and toil if it prove too much and the narrative ends in a death certificate. The public ought to be fairer, ought to be more courteous and more considerate. And the public is "you and I and all of us."—St. Louis Republic.

Practically 50 per cent of the order's membership is in the United States. The withdrawal of the order does not affect the insurance held by present members. No new business can be

THE SPARTA TEAM WAS TOO STRONG FOR LOCALS.

There was nothing to that football game last Saturday that local fans had been looking forward to with such keen anticipation, with championship honors following immediately after it. It went the wrong way. Sixty to two in favor of Sparta. And it appears that Sparta won it strictly on merit, for there was no talk of prejudicial officials, poor referee work, or anything of that sort. It was just a plain beat by a lighter and better team than we have here.

The boys here say that in Sparta the team trains like a lot of professionals, and that as a consequence they should win. This probably tells the story in a nutshell. Some of our local boys also say that the members of the team did not play as they have heretofore this season. It might be stated that a team never shows up as well when it is losing as when winning, which might account for appearances to a certain extent.

Death of Arthur J. Houston.

Dr. George Houston received the sad intelligence on Monday of the death of his brother, Arthur J. Houston, who passed away on Saturday, Nov. 22nd, at the Presidio general hospital at San Francisco. Death was caused by cerebro-spinal meningitis.

The news came as a great shock to Mr. Houston and his mother as they did not know that he was sick or that there was anything the matter with him. Arthur was serving as drum major of the 6th U. S. Infantry at the time of his death, he having enlisted in the regular army in 1902. The funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, the remains being interred in the National cemetery of the Presidio, Cal., with full military honors. It was the intention to have the remains shipped here, but the family received a communication from Robert Houston, who arrived soon after his brother's death, asking that the burial might take place in the National cemetery, and a permission was granted. The National cemetery, by the way, is one of the grandest spots on the Pacific coast, and a fitting place for the last sleep of one of Uncle Sam's boys.

Arthur J. Houston was born at Stevens Point on the 24th of June, 1875, and was a twin brother to Dr. George Houston of this city, and the son of Mrs. Lydia Houston of this city. He came to Grand Rapids with his family about twenty years ago, and lived here until he enlisted in the Spanish-American war, when he enlisted with Co. A, of Marshfield and served during the trouble with Spain. Owing to his exceptional ability as a musician, he was transferred to the band soon after reaching the front and served in the capacity of solo cornetist during his enlistment.

Mr. Houston enlisted in the regular army in 1902, and served continuously until his death as drum major of the band.

The surviving members of the family are his mother, Mrs. Lydia Houston of this city, Dr. P. R. Houston of Green Bay, Dr. George R. Houston of this city, Dr. Robert T. Houston of Los Angeles, Cal., Mrs. J. A. Pritchard of Tacoma, Wash., and Mrs. H. P. Natwick of Pikeville, Md.

YOUNG MAN BECOMES DE-

MENTED WHILE IN ARMY.

Alton Golla, who had been serving an enlistment in the U. S. Army, was brought to this city on Friday in charge of Private A. C. Spencer and turned over to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Golla. Young Golla enlisted about four months ago at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., and was assigned to service in the Fourth California Cavalry, now stationed in the Philippines. After he reached the Philippines his daily developments and he was sent home. The young man gave his guard no trouble at any time and was apparently all right when he reached here.

Man-Bushmaker.

Miss Jennie Man and John Bushmaker of Rudolph were married this morning at 10:30 at the west side German Lutheran church, Rev. Wm. Nommensen, performing the ceremony. After the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Herman Gouchee on Fourth avenue north to a number of friends and relatives. After a brief wedding tour the newly married couple will go to housekeeping on a farm in the town of Rudolph.

Want Another Carrier.

The mail business of the city has increased so much of late that the present mail carriers in the city are unable to handle the business properly, and in order to relieve the strain Postmaster Nash has applied to the department for the appointment of another carrier. The matter is now under investigation by the department, and it is expected that another carrier will be put on the job before a great while.

PEOPLE FROM NORTH
WANT THE POOR FARM

At the last meeting of the county board it was proposed by some members from the north end of the county to move the poor farm to the north end of the county and run it in connection with the insane asylum up there. The claim was made that this could be done at a much lower cost to the county than being done now in its present location.

With a view to ascertaining the facts the case a committee was appointed by the chair for the purpose of investigating the matter, the committee consisting of Messrs. Seidl, Phillips, Williams and Leu. These gentlemen will go over the matter thoroughly and after investigating the matter and reducing their deductions to dollars and cents will submit them to a future meeting of the board.

It might be stated that when the asylum was given to the north end of the county it was with the understanding that the poor farm would remain where it is at the present time, but of course such agreements do not cut a great deal of figure with some people.

Where the poor farm is located does not cut much figure with anybody. Probably if a good live farmer had the same amount of ground at his disposal he would produce more cash year than the poor farm is doing, so that it would not make much difference whether it is located in the north or south end of the county.

If it were decided to move it to the north end there would be a lot of expense in getting it established, such as the erection of suitable buildings, etc., all of which would have to be taken into consideration. Some of the board members are of the opinion that if the present poor farm were given a proper show it would be self-supporting, right where it is located now, and these are men who have made a success of the farming business.

The Boundaries of Truth, by K. P. Gerould, Atlantic, Oct. 1913, p. 454-460. With the statement, "It is never permissible to lie," Miss Gerould begins a clever article in which she attempts a thoroughly modern boundary of the application of the word. She develops the idea that it is impossible to avoid lies—that is, in the strictest sense of the word, but that it is a dangerous practice which is justifiable only when it helps others.

Game Farming, by D. W. Huntington, Independent, Oct. 3, 1913, p. 36-38. Game farming as one of the great future industries of this country is predicted by Mr. Huntington. Several large game clubs, already in existence in the East, have re-stocked certain regions with desirable hunting game. The success of these enterprises substantiates the claim that game breeding is a paying proposition.

The Progressive Party, by Theodore Roosevelt, Century, Oct. 1913, p. 324-326. A comprehensive view of the Progressive party, its development and principles, at its leader sees them. His blunt statements concerning the points of difference between this party and the Democratic and Republican parties as to bosses and false doctrines will be read by all who are interested in the fortunes of the Progressive party and of Mr. Roosevelt.

How Trees are Converted Into Paper, by T. J. Keenan, Scientific American, Oct. 4, 1913, p. 256-258. A graphic description by the editor of "Paper" of a trip through a modern paper mill, with twelve illustrations showing the various stages of converting wood into paper.

This number might be styled the "Paper Number" as it devotes space to the fortunes of the Progressive party and of Mr. Roosevelt. The most graphic is "How Trees are Converted Into Paper," the others are "The Interesting Lives of Paper," "How the Government Tests Paper" and "India Paper and Its Uses." The Supplement of the same is largely devoted to more technical articles on the subject.

Are Looking for the Reason.
Down at Wild Rose the newspaper of that burg is stirring up quite a furor because the price of potatoes is lower there than in surrounding towns claiming that the village is being injured by being discriminated against in this matter.

If it is true that buyers pay less there than in other places they are not to be blamed for putting up a good strong kick, for there is nothing that will give a town such a black eye as to have the report go out that buyers will not pay the market price for farm products of all kinds, or even one kind.

As potatoes are one of the principal products down in that country, it makes quite a difference if surrounding farmers go to other towns to market their crop. Then it is not the right thing for the few nearby ones who do stick to their home town thru thick and thin, and go there in spite of the disadvantages.

Union Thanksgiving Service.

The annual Union Thanksgiving service will be held on Thursday morning at half past ten o'clock in the Scandinavian Moravian church. The Rev. A. C. Fiedner will preach the sermon. An offering for Riverview hospital will be taken at this service. The churches uniting in the service are the Baptist, Episcopal, Methodist, Congregational and Scandinavian Moravian.

Took Rural Carrier Examination.

An examination for rural carrier was held in this city on Saturday, nine taking the test. The examination was held by W. B. Raymond, assisted by Otto Mickelson. Those who took the examination were Will Compton, Charles Hill, George Porrand, Will Verduhn, Arthur Rockwood, Leo Bendorff, J. P. Englund, H. Krueck and C. B. Harrington of Nekeosha.

Only one farmers' institute will be held in Wood county the coming winter. This will be at Auburndale on January 23d and 24d, and will be conducted by David Imrie.

DOES WOOD COUNTY NEED A HUMANE SOCIETY?

Dear Editor:—
Have you a Humane Society in your County? If not, why not organize? What of the humane situation in your county? Are there any neglected or misused children or old people, or underfed, overworked, overbeaten horses or other animals cruelly beaten or inhumanly treated? If so, what is being done for their relief?

It has been found that in most counties where there is no humane society much unnecessary cruelty is allowed to exist, and we wish to direct your attention to the practical value to your county in the organization and incorporation of a humane society. Three persons can form such a corporation and the cost is trifling.

The State Legislature has provided that whenever a Humane Society is incorporated for the prevention of abuse or neglect of children or cruelty to animals in any county in this state, The County Board may appropriate the sum of twelve hundred dollars for the maintenance of this work and must appropriate, when called upon to do so, two hundred dollars, toward the expenses of the humane agent in the county, (see Section 1360-a, laws of 1909—revised statutes and Chapter 106, laws of 1913.)

Some counties are making the maximum shown where the law is in effect, and have some very good results. Has your county ever made such appropriation?

Any information in regard to organizing and incorporating a Humane Society will be cheerfully furnished if you address the Wisconsin Humane Herald, Hartford, Wis.

WOOD COUNTY VOTES MONEY

TOWARD NEKEOSHA BRIDGE.

At the session of the county board last week the sum of $15,000 was voted to aid in the building of the bridge which it is proposed to put across the Wisconsin river at Nekeosha. It might be said that this action was not taken because the board members felt that Nekeosha was entitled to the help of the county in this matter, not because the board was in a philanthropic mood and had to give some money to somebody in order to ease their feelings.

It is a case of have to. The village of Nekeosha asked for the money and the law provides the amount that the county shall donate in a case of this kind, which was $15,000. It is currently reported that the people of Nekeosha are having some little trouble in getting together on the bridge proposition. They have voted to build the bridge, but they cannot agree where it should be located. The people doing business in Nekeosha is known as the "Loop" district where the bridge located below the dam and those above the loop want it above the dam. Either faction, it is said, would rather not have a bridge than to have it where they do not want it.

Will Hold Special Election

Marshfield Herald:—The town of Rock seems to be unfortunate in way of damage suits. Several years ago they had one that dragged through the courts with the result that the town had to foot the bill. The town is again threatened with another suit, the plaintiff in the action being Dr. Lavense of Lindsey. It seems the doctor some four weeks ago, while returning home from a professional call, was in a runaway accident, his horses having become frightened at a portable saw mill that had been left by the owner standing in the road. The case thus far has resulted in the doctor making an offer of settlement for $1,000 and upon refusal to pay the amount asked for he will take the matter to the courts.

Believing that the voters of the town should be the ones to decide on the question, the town officials have called a special election for next Wednesday at which time it will be settled whether they accept the terms of settlement made by the doctor or whether they fight the case in court.

Death of Mrs. John Podawitz.

Mrs. Tena Berg Podawitz, wife of John Podawitz, died at her home on the east side on Friday afternoon, November 21, after an illness of about a year, death being caused by liver trouble.

Deceased was a native of Germany, where she was born on the 20th of March, 1856, and was consequently in her 58th year at the time of her death. She was married to Mr. Podawitz, thirty-nine years ago, and most of that time has made her home in this city. She is survived by three children, they being Arthur Podawitz of Eau Claire, Mrs. James Broome and Mrs. E. Andrews of this city. The funeral was held on Monday afternoon from the home, the services being conducted by the Rev. C. A. Mellicke of the First Moravian church.

S. L. Brooks Sells Two Farms.

S. L. Brooks, the past has sold the C. S. J. farm, in the town of Stevens Point, to Mr. A. R. Hill, of Iowa, who has taken possession of same. Mr. Brooks also sold the Mike Sierck farm of 80 acres in the town of Sirel to Mr. Link of Milwaukee, who takes possession of the place on December 10th.

A. R. HIRST TALKS
TO COUNTY BOARD

A. R. Hirst, state highway commissioner, was in the city on Thursday and while here improved the opportunity to talk to our county board members on the subject of highway in general. Mr. Hirst has been at the head of the state highway commission for number of years past and is not only well informed on the subject of highway construction, but those who have heard his advice during the time he has been in office, and heeded it, have been unanimous in saying that Mr. Hirst is not only a good man to meet and do business with, but that he understands his business and that he invariably advises the proper course to pursue, when all the conditions are considered.

In Mr. Hirst's talk to the board members he conveyed the impression that Wood county was going a trifle strong on the road proposition, and that it might be well to slow up a trifle.

Mr. Hirst also explained that the present macadam roads that are being built in many places throughout the country are not indestructible, as many think they are, but that under existing conditions they last for only about five years, when it is necessary to dig them up and put on a new surface, when they will be good for another term of years. The life of the road can be extended very materially, however, by doing it once a year, at a cost of several hundred dollars a mile.

The matter of building a road that will stand the traffic nowadays is more of a problem than it was a few years ago, owing to the existence of the heavy, high speed automobile, which runs thru the country at a rate which a few years ago was not thought of on country roads. In those days almost any kind of a stone road would wear a good many years, and with a little attention and repairs it was possible, once a macadam road was installed, to keep it in existence almost indefinitely. Now it is different. When it would seem as if a pneumatic tire would roll over a road with very little damage, and it will at a low rate of speed, but when they get to moving at thirty miles an hour or more, the pneumatic tire develops an enormous amount of suction that tears the fine filling out from between the stones and after a time leaves the once smooth road in a very rough and objectionable condition.

In many places roads are now being built of concrete, it having been found by experience that while the first cost of the road was more, the life of the highway was so much longer that it was cheaper in the end. Then concrete makes a better and smoother road and a much easier one to haul over during its entire life.

This road proposition is becoming quite a problem. If you are in favor of good roads and want them improved without delay it is possible that somebody may call you a spendthrift, and if you are against them you are accused of being a back number and against progress. There you are, you can take your choice. It may be that the present law is responsible for such a concerted movement in the way of road building, as the different towns throughout the state are almost compelled to vote money for road building whether they want to or not, for if each town does not use the money it will have to pay its share of the taxes anyway, and some other town will get the money.

MAY GET POTATO MEETING

FOR GRAND RAPIDS IN 1914.

Ben Hansen was at Rhinocander last week to attend the potato growers convention that was held in that city. Mr. Hansen reports that there was a large and enthusiastic meeting, and that it was well worth the trip to attend. Mr. Hansen brought back with him some samples of potatoes which were very nice specimens.

Mr. Hansen is of the opinion that the convention might be secured for this city next year if our citizens got together on the proposition and all pulled together. Grand Rapids is ideally located for such a gathering, being right in the midst of the potato belt and as the convention brings together a large number of people it would be a good method of advertising the city.

"ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE."

Theatregoers will be greatly pleased to learn that Manager Daly of the Daly Theatre has secured for production here soon Jones and Crane's elaborate scenic production of Paul Armstrong's play "Alias JIMMY VALENTINE." This enterprising firm of Chicago producers has sent here, during the last several seasons some of the very best attractions playing Wisconsin, among them "The War," "The Arab," "The Servant in the House" and "The Virginian," however, their latest success "Alias JIMMY VALENTINE" is said to greatly overshadow anything previously sent on tour by them. They have secured the original Leiber & Co. production, in its entirety, and have been very fortunate in securing and exceptionally capable cast, which is said to compare very favorably with the original company.

FREE DEMONSTRATION

Mrs. A. Allen will be at the Johnson & Hill Co's grocery store next week giving a demonstration of Instant Postum, Grape Nuts and Post Toasties. VICTORIA IS TAKEN

CAPITAL OF TAMAUlipas LOST TO FEDERALS AFTER BLOOD-TEST BATTLE OF WAR.

TAMPICO REPORTED TAKEN

Carranza's Aid Demands Credentials of Male and Negotiations Are at an End—Huerta Is Increasing His Army.

Brownsville, Tex., Nov. 20.—Victoria, capital of the state of Tamaulipas, Mexico, was captured Tuesday by the constitutionalists after what Gen. Pablo Gonzalez, rebel commander, describes as the bloodiest battle of the revolution. General Gonzalez says hundreds of the federal garrison were killed. A large number of the federalists made a last stand in the city after being driven from a convent. Every one of these was slain.

The fall of the capital gave the insurgents control of the entire state except the important seaport, Tampico, where a strong force of rebels is operating.

Gonzalez reported his victory to rebel headquarters at Matamoros. He said that bodies lay everywhere in the streets and were thick in the courtyard and halls of the government palace, where part of the federal garrison made a last stand after being driven out of a Catholic sanctuary. Every one of these defenders was slain. The greater portion of the garrison of 3,000 men, however, evacuated the city after 40 hours of fighting.

The federalists retreated to Tula, where they were overtaken by the constitutionalists and again defeated. They fled into the hills. Generals Barajas, Arzame and Eugenio Aguilar commanded the federalists. The attacking constitutionalists were reported to number 5,000 men. Their loss was four officers and between 30 and 40 men. Many handsome buildings razed by shell were leveled with the torch in the hand-to-hand fighting. Victoria has a population of 15,000.

City of Mexico, Nov. 20.—President Huerta's friends said that he regarded intervention by the United States as probable. An order was sent to the state governors Tuesday to report immediately how many soldiers they could have ready by November 20.

The departure of Americans from Mexico continues, although in decreasing number, which indicates that the majority of them intending to leave have gone. Invitations to the opening of the Mexican congress have been sent to the diplomatic corps.

Nogales, Sonora, Nov. 20.—Francisco Escudero, minister of foreign relations of the Carranza cabinet, asked William Haydon Hale, President Wilson's agent, to present his credentials before continuing conferences that had been under way informally. This was interpreted as a vital demand for recognition of the constitutionalist revolution before the diplomatic exchanges between Carranza and the Washington government could be concluded.

The indications were that the Washington government was demanding of the revolutionists certain guarantees which the latter apparently believed vitally concerned their dignity and independence of action.

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 20.—Federalists are advancing north from Chihuahua City in the direction of Juarez, capital of the rebels. A battle took place between the advancing federalists and the rebels' rear guard at Laguna, midway between Juarez and Chihuahua. Pancho Villa's camp of Juarez, admitted losing five men, killed in the battle, but said the federalists lost 35.

SIDNEY MOULTHROP IS KILLED

Man Who Threatened President and Lawmaker With "Explosives" Placed in Cell at Washington.

Washington, Nov. 20.—Sidney Moulthrop, the stenographer accused by James Hamilton Lewis, senator from Illinois, of having falsified and published the letter informing H. M. Pin-dell of the terms upon which he would be made ambassador to Russia, is in jail here. He was arrested on a warrant charging him with forgery. Moulthrop refused to make any statement.

The specific charge is that he forged a check on Senator Lewis for $200, the complaint being made by Edward Sullivan, private secretary to the senator. The arrest came just as the secret service men in this vicinity were about to hunt for Moulthrop as the alleged writer of a letter received by President Wilson saying that unless the president makes Senator Lewis cease prosecution of Moulthrop a letter involving the president himself would be made public.

It was said Sunday that letters were sent to Senator Lewis declaring if the senator persisted in the prosecution the threat of making public other letters would be carried out.

INDIANS DEFY U. S.

Navajo Army Encamped on Mountain and Stir Whole Tribe to Open Rebellion.

Santa Fe, N. M., Nov. 20.—Fifteen hundred Navajo Indians rallied Tuesday in defense of eight renegades, and are reported in armed encampment on beautiful mountains, thirty-five miles southwest of the Shiprock agency, defying United States Marshall Hudspeeth to take prisoner the renegades, who are wanted on federal warrants charging horse stealing, assault and bigamy.

Two troops of cavalry have been sought by the marshal, and the request has been referred by the war department to Maj. Gen. Carter, in command of the border patrol. It is feared that before the cavalry arrives the renegades will be joined by many more at the command of the medicine men and of the plural wife men who are reported to be stirring the Navajos to rebellion.

The Indians are fortifying on a high table mountain, the summit of which is approachable by only one tortuous road.

Marshall Hudspeeth, after surveying the position, returned here with three of the original eleven renegades he was sent from here ten days ago to arrest. The eight others escaped and rallied their tribesmen.

An investigation by the marshal and the Indian agents showed that the Indians surrounding the renegade leaders had rounded up their cattle and sheep, harvested their corn, and otherwise made ready for a siege.

The Indians are led by Chief Black Horse and 150 bucks.

STATE SUFFRAGE MEET AT MADISON

Amendment to National Constitution Granting Equal Suffrage Is Proposed—Suffrage Planks Are Urged.

Madison.—The state suffrage convention at the opening session listened to the address of Mrs. H. M. Youmans, Waukesha, president, and a variety of papers on many phases of the suffrage problem.

The speakers urged the importance of a federal amendment and increased educational work. The resolution for the amendment to the constitution was presented by the Rev. Olympia Brown of Racine. She said that an amendment was the easiest way and the most secure method of securing the ballot for women in all the states.

A resolution was adopted that every party be asked to put a suffrage plank in its platform.

Mrs. Henry M. Youmans, president, in her address, said:

"At the last election on woman suffrage in Wisconsin a year ago, we polled 135,000 votes. The opposition polled 90,000 more than we did, so that, at that time we needed nearly 50,000 more votes than we received to win. When our next election on woman suffrage rolls around, some of our friends will have passed away; possibly some will have had the bad taste to change their minds; the population of the state will have increased. We shall have to convert 60,000 or 70,000 more men in Wisconsin to the belief in our cause before we women of Wisconsin can win the ballot."

WEDDING OF MISS JESSIE WILSON AND FRANCIS B. SAYRE

Mr. and Mrs. Sayre and East Room in Which They Were Wedded.

Washington, Nov. 25.—Jessie Woodrow Wilson, second of President Wilson's three daughters, was married to Francis Bowes Sayre at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon. The ceremony took place in the east room of the White House, and was performed by Rev. Sylvester Beach of Princeton, N. J., the president's former pastor and the close friend of the Wilson family for many years.

The entire affair was very simple, as had been requested by the bride, and the number of guests was rather small—distressingly so to many persons in official and social circles of Washington who had expected to receive invitations but were disappointed.

Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson, eldest of the three daughters, acted as maid of honor to her sister, and Miss Eleanor Randolph Wilson, the youngest, was one of the bridesmaids. The three other bridesmaids were Miss Adeline Mitchell Scott of Princeton, daughter of Prof. William B. Scott; Miss Marjorie Brown of Atlanta, Pa., daughter of Mrs. Wilson's cousin, Col. E. T. Brown, and Miss Mary G. White of Baltimore, a college friend of the bride.

Dr. Grenfell is Best Man. Mr. Sayre was attended by his best man, Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the famous medical missionary to the fishermen of the Labrador coast. The two men have long been fast friends and Mr. Sayre spent two summers helping Dr. Grenfell with his work.

The ushers were Charles E. Hughes, Jr., son of Justice Hughes of the Supreme court and a classmate of Mr. Sayre in the Harvard law school; Dr. Gilbert Horax of Montclair, N. J., who was a classmate at Williams college in 1903 and now at Johns Hopkins university; Benjamin Burton of New York city, and Dr. Scoville Clark of Salem, Mass., who was Mr. Sayre's companion in Labrador and Newfoundland.

Wedding Gown of Ivory Satin. The bride's gown was of satin, of a soft ivory tint, trimmed with beautiful lace, both old and new. It was made in New York and the women decorators declared that it was a masterpiece. The lingerie in the trousseau is of the most dainty material and is all hand made. The maid of honor and bridesmaids were beautifully groomed and all looked their best.

Coming right in the midst of the chrysanthemum season, this was made a chrysanthemum wedding and that flower was used most profusely in adorning the White House. As the bride's favorite color is mauve, that was made the prevailing color in the decorations. The east room, and indeed all the rooms in the president's mansion, were beautiful indeed.

Depart on Their Honeymoon. After the ceremony was completed and the couple had received the congratulations of the guests, refreshments were served, and then Mr. and Mrs. Sayre departed for their honeymoon. Their plans include a visit to the home of Miss Nevins, Mr. Sayre's aunt, at Windsor Forges, near Churchtown, Pa., where they first met. After January 1 they will live in Williamstown, Mass., for Mr. Sayre is to sever his connection with the office of District Attorney Whitman in New York and become assistant to Harry A. Garfield, president of Williams college.

and trying to obtain through the windows a glimpse of the doings within. The police arrangements were admirable and nothing happened, in the White House or outside, to mar the happy occasion.

Immense Wedding Cake. Jessie Wilson's wedding cake was a triumph of the pastry cook's art. It was two and a half feet tall, counting the white orchids that were placed on top of it, and weighed 125 pounds. The first layer was four inches thick and 22 inches across. The cake contained 19 ingredients and its cost was about $500. Over the body of the cake was molded a thick white icing design for the initials of the bride and groom, done in silver, and around the sides were lines of the valley in white sugar. This delicious confection was distributed in 2,000 dainty white boxes tied with satin ribbon and each of the proper size to go under the pillow of the recipient to bring dreams.

There was one disappointment for those who attended the wedding, for the gifts were not put on display. It is known that these included many beautiful and valuable articles sent by relatives and personal friends of the bride and groom and of their families and by admirers of President Wilson. Handsome presents were sent by both the senate and the house, that of the latter being a diamond lavalliere which Miss Genevieve Clark, daughter of the speaker, bought for the representatives in New York.

Guests Limited to 400. Those who were invited to witness the wedding were mostly personal friends and the number was kept down close to four hundred. The list was pared and revised several times, and as has been said, the operation resulted in many heartburnings. From the house of representatives' circle, for instance, the only guests were Speaker Champ Clark, Mrs. Clark and Miss Genevieve Clark, Marjorie Leader Underwood and Mrs. Underwood, and Minority Leader Mann and Mrs. Mann.

As might be expected, the streets outside the White House were crowded as the police would permit, with curious persons eager to watch the arrival and departure of the guests.

VICTORIA IS TAKEN

CAPITAL OF TAMAUPLIPAS LOST TO FEDERALS AFTER BLOOD-TEST BATTLE OF WAR.

TAMPICO REPORTED TAKEN

Carranza's Aid Demands Credentials of Hale and Negotiations Are at an End—Huerta Is Increasing His Army.

Brownsville, Tex., Nov. 20.—Victoria, capital of the state of Tamaulipas, Mexico, was captured Tuesday by the constitutionalists after what Gen. Pablo Gonzales, rebel commander, describes as the bloodiest battle of the revolution. General Gonzales says hundreds of the federal garrison were killed. A large number of the federals made a last stand in the city after being driven from a convent. Every one of these was slain.

The fall of the capital gave the insurgents control of the entire state except the important seaport, Tampico, where a strong force of rebels is operating.

Gonzales reported his victory to rebel headquarters at Matamoros. He said that bodies lay everywhere in the streets and were thick in the courtyard and halls of the government palace, where part of the federal garrison made a last stand after being driven out of a Catholic sanctuary. Every one of these defenders was slain. The greater portion of the garrison of 5,000 men, however, evacuated the city after 40 hours of fighting.

The federals retreated to Tula, where they were overtaken by the constitutionalists and again defeated. They fled into the hills. Generals Rabinaga, Arzamendi and Eugenio Aguilar commanded the federals. The attacking constitutionalists were reported to number 6,000 men. Their loss was four officers and between 30 and 40 men. Many handsome buildings not razed by shell were leveled with the torch in the hand-to-hand fighting. Victoria has a population of 15,000.

City of Mexico, Nov. 20.—President Huerta's friends said that he regarded intervention by the United States as probable. An order was sent to the state governors Tuesday to report immediately how many soldiers they could have ready by November 20.

The departure of Americans from Mexico continues, at least in decreasing number, which indicates that the majority of them intending to leave have gone.

Invitations to the opening of the Mexican congress have been sent to the diplomatic corps.

Nogales, Sonora, Nov. 20.—Francisco Escudero, minister of foreign relations of the Carranza cabinet, asked William Haywood, state President Wilson's agent, to present his credentials before conferring conferences that had been under way informally. This was interpreted as a vital demand for recognition of the constitutional revolution before the diplomatic changes between Carranza and the Washington government could be concluded.

The indications were that the Washington government was demanding of the revolutionists certain guarantees which the latter apparently believed vitally concerned their dignity and independence of action.

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 20.—Federals are advancing north from Chihuahua City in the direction of Juarez, captured by the rebels. A battle took place between the advancing federals and the rebels' rear guard at Laguna, midway between Juarez and Chihuahua. Pancho Villa, captor of Juarez, admitted losing a battle in the battle, but said the federals lost 35.

SIDNEY MOULTHROP IS JAILLED

Man Who Threatened President and Lawmaker With Exposure Placed in Cell at Washington.

Washington, Nov. 20.—Sidney Moulthrop, the photographer accused by James Hamilton Lewis, senator from Illinois, of having falsified and published the letter informing H. M. Pinchot of the terms upon which he would be made ambassador to Russia, is in jail here. He was arrested on a warrant charging him with forgery. Moulthrop refused to make any statement.

The specific charge is that he forged a check on Senator Lewis for $200, the complaint being made by Edward Sullivan, private secretary to the senator. The arrest came as a result of an investigation into this "vitality" was about to hunt for Moulthrop as the alleged writer of a letter received by President Wilson saying that unless the president makes Senator Lewis cease prosecution of Moulthrop a letter involving the president himself will be made public.

It is said similar letters were sent to Senator Lewis declaring if the senator persisted in the prosecution the threat of making public other letters would be carried out.

INDIANS DEFEY U. S.

Navajo Army Encamps on Mountain and Stir Whole Tribe to Open Rebellion.

Santa Fe, N. M., Nov. 20.—Fifteen hundred Navajo Indians rallied Tuesday in defense of eight renegades, and are reported in armed encampment on a beautiful mountain, thirty-five miles southwest of the Shiprock agency, defying United States Marshall Hudspeth to take prisoner the renegades, who are wanted on federal warrants charging horse stealing, assault and bigamy.

Two troops of cavalry have been sought by the marshal, and the request has been referred by the war department to Maj. Gen. Carter, in command of the border patrol. It is feared that before the cavalry arrives the renegades will be joined by many more and the command of the medicine men and the plural wife men, who are reported to be stirring the Navajos to rebellion.

Marshal Hudspeth, after surveying the position, returned here with three of the original eleven renegades who were sent from here ten days ago to arrest. The eight others escaped and rallied their tribesmen.

An investigation by the marshal and the Indian agents showed that the Indians surrounding the mountain, and the command of the medicine men and the plural wife men, who are reported to be stirring the Navajos to rebellion.

The Indians are led by Chief Black Horse and 150 bucks.

PAIR MET SECRETLY AT HOTEL

Physician Arranges to See His Alleged Rival by Appointment, Then Kills Him in Kansas City Hotel—Tells Two Stories of the Tragedy.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 20.—Dr. W. T. Elam of St. Joseph, officer in the Missouri Valley Medical association and one of the faculty of the Central-Ensworth Medical college, shot and instantly killed William Putnam Cramer at the Hotel Baltimore in this city, following a meeting on Tuesday.

Back of the shooting is the story of a secret romance and the relentless tracking of Cramer by an angry husband, who, under the guise of a friend, lured him to the hotel.

The Elams have been married five years, and they have no children. Mrs. Elam is now in Detroit attending her mother, Mrs. J. N. West, who is seriously ill. She knew nothing of the shooting until a relative sent a telegram to her. Cramer was married and a traveling advertising solicitor for a magazine.

Cramer and Mrs. Elam had met by appointment once, but another woman was present. They dined at the Hotel Baltimore and afterwards went to a theater. Cramer is said to have expressed confidence that he could fully explain this to the angry doctor and bring about harmony.

Cramer and the husband met in the reception room of the hotel. The meeting had been arranged through letters. Cramer's attorney and Detective Jack Glynn, who had been employed by Dr. Elam to trace his wife, were present. Then the doctor and the doctor adjourned to a room on the second floor of the hotel to "talk matters over."

The two men had been in the room 15 minutes when the shooting occurred. The doctor said: "Afterwards he said: 'I knew Cramer was lying and I shot him.'"

FIND SPENCER GUILTY

MURDER FIRST DEGREE RETURNED AGAINST SLAYER.

Curses Jurors and Judge—Loses His Nerve When Attempt at Insanity Fails.

Wheaton, Ill., Nov. 17.—"We, the jury, find the defendant, Henry Spencer, guilty as charged, and we fix the penalty at death," read the clerk. That verdict was returned on Friday in the case of the state against Mildred Allison Rexroat.

Spencer heard the verdict read to him in the courtroom and instantly he became a wilder animal than he had been at any stage since his arrest.

"They'll hang me!" he shouted. "By God, they got me!" Then he cursed the judge, the jury, his own lawyer and himself.

Spencer sank fainting into his chair. "How does that jury know I wasn't insane? I was insane—I am crazy. They think I was just acting—well, maybe I was and maybe I wasn't—the jury don't know—they just make a guess and they string me up."

Attorney Anton Zeman, who has represented the prisoner through the trial, was not present, and so Judge Slusser himself ordered an entry of the usual motion for a new trial, and set the hearing for a week from Saturday. Spencer heard and jerked up his head and cursed his attorney.

Brown Quits as Road Head.—New York Central Head Says He Has Earned a Rest—In Rail Serv. Ice Fifty Years.

New York, Nov. 20.—William C. Brown, president of the New York Central lines, resigned on Tuesday. His resignation was presented at the meeting of the directors and was accepted to take effect January 1.

His successor was not selected. It is generally believed, however, that Alfred H. Smith, who became senior vice-president of the Central lines in March last, will be elected president in the near future. President Brown has been contemplating his retirement for some time. He was appointed president in February, 1900. His desire to seek a well-earned rest after 50 years' service in railroading, the fact that his hearing was impaired and his contemplated return to Iowa, where he spent his early years, are given as the reasons.

STATE SUFFRAGE MEET AT MADISON

WISCONSIN WOMEN PLAN CAMPAIGN FOR BALLOT AT ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Amendment to National Constitution Granting Equal Suffrage Is Proposed—Suffrage Planks Are Urged.

Madison.—The state suffrage convention at the opening session listened to the address of Mrs. H. M. Youmans, Waukesha, president, and a variety of papers on many phases of the suffrage problem.

The speakers urged the importance of a federal amendment and increased educational work. The resolution for the amendment to the constitution was presented by the Rev. Olympia Brown of Racine. She said that an amendment was the easiest way and the most secure method of securing the ballot for women in all the states. A resolution was adopted that every party be asked to put a suffrage plank in its platform.

Mrs. Henry M. Youmans, president, in her address, said: "At the last election on woman suffrage in Wisconsin a year ago we polled 135,000 votes. The opposition polled 90,000 more than we did, so that, at that time we needed nearly 50,000 more votes than we received to win. When our next election on woman suffrage rolls around, some of our friends will have passed away; possibly some will have had the bad taste to change their minds; the population of the state will have increased. We shall have to convert 60,000 or 70,000 more men in Wisconsin to the belief in our cause before we women of Wisconsin can win the ballot."

The entire affair was very simple, as had been requested by the bride, and the number of guests was rather small—differing so to many persons in official and social circles of Washington who had expected to receive invitations but were disappointed.

Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson, eldest of the three daughters, acted as maid of honor to her sister, and Miss Eleanor Randolph Wilson, the youngest, was one of the bridesmaids. The three other bridesmaids were Miss Adeline Mitchell Scott of Princeton, daughter of Prof. William B. Scott; Miss Marjorie Brown of Atlantic City, is dying from a wound in the brain and eye; Dunnebecke is in the county jail, suffering from a severe scalp wound as the result of a shoot-out near North street. Hutchinson and Dunnebecke met in front of the home of Mrs. Frank Kolke. It is alleged that both wished to marry Mrs. Kolke. Hutchinson, it is said, attempted to kill Dunnebecke and then turned the gun on himself.

Dr. Grenfell Is Best Man.—Mr. Sayre was attended by his best man, Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the famous medical missionary to the Labrador. The two men of the Labrador were Dr. Grenfell and Dr. Grenfell with his work.

The ushers were Charles E. Hughes, Jr., son of Justice Hughes of the Supreme court and a classmate of Mr. Sayre in the Harvard law school; Dr. Gilbert Horax of Montpelier, N. J., who was a classmate at Williams college in 1903 and now at Johns Hopkins university; Benjamin Burton of New York city, and Dr. Scoville Clark of Salem, Mass., who was Mr. Sayre's companion in Labrador and Newfoundland.

Wedding Gown of Ivory Satin.—The bride's gown was of satin, of a soft ivory tint, trimmed with beautiful lace, both old and rare. It was made in New York and the women commentators declared that it was a masterpiece. The lingerie in the trousseau is of the most dainty material and is all hand made. The maid of honor and bridesmaids were beautifully gowned and all looked their best.

Coming right in the midst of the chrysanthemum wedding and that flower was used most profusely in adorning the White House. As the bride's favorite color is mauve, that was made the prevailing color in the decorations. The east room, and indeed all the rooms in the president's mansion, were beautiful.

Depart on Their Honeymoon.—After the ceremony was completed and the couple had received the congratulations of the guests, refreshments were served, and then Mr. and Mrs. Sayre departed for their honeymoon. Their plans include a visit to the home of Miss Nevin, Mr. Sayre's aunt, at Windsor Forge, near Clear Lake, Pa., where they first met. After January 1 they will live in Williams town, Pa. Mr. Sayre is to sever his connection with the office of District Attorney Whitman in New York and become assistant to Harry A. Garfield, president of Williams college.

Immense Wedding Cake.—Jessie Wilson's wedding cake was a triumph of the pastry cook's art. It was two and a half feet tall, counting the white orchids that were placed on top of it, and weighed 135 pounds. The first layer was four inches thick and 22 inches across. The cake contained 12 ingredients and its cost was about $500. Over the body of the cake was molded a thick white icing scroll work, on its top was a design for the initials of the bride and groom, done in silver, and around the sides were fillets of the valley in white sugar. This delicious confection was distributed in 2,000 dainty white boxes tied with satin ribbon and each of the proper size to go under the pillow of the recipient to bring dreams.

Mr. and Mrs. Sayre and East Room in Which They Were Wedded.

Washington, Nov. 25.—Jessie Woodrow Wilson, second of President Wilson's daughters, was married to Francis Bowes Sayre at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon. The ceremony took place in the east room of the White House, and was performed by Rev. Sylvester Beach of Princeton, N. J., the president's former pastor and the close friend of the Wilson family for many years.

The entire affair was very simple, as had been requested by the bride, and the number of guests was rather small—differing so to many persons in official and social circles of Washington who had expected to receive invitations but were disappointed.

Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson, eldest of the three daughters, acted as maid of honor to her sister, and Miss Eleanor Randolph Wilson, the youngest, was one of the bridesmaids. The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

The Prisoner of Hofberg

(Copyright, 1912, by W. G. Chapman.)

ROSNY, the western secretary of the League of Lost Causes, was not in Paris. Paul Lane could not find him. The League's offices were closed and abandoned, while on the window was displayed a sign advertising that they were for rental. The landlord could give no information as to Rosny's whereabouts. He had paid his rent and departed five or six days before; more than that he did not know.

After a hasty search through Paris for nearly a week Paul saw a paragraph in a newspaper which threw a flood of light on his perplexity.

"It is rumored," said the writer, "that the Princess Clothilde will shortly be married to His Highness Archduke Stephan. The match, which is much liked by the Emperor Franz Joseph, was, it will be remembered, postponed some time ago on account of her highness' predilection for what may be called, without less majesty, foreign travel. It is said by the scandalously inclined, in fact, that her highness has been the heroine of more than one runaway escapade, involving America, the Tripolitane, where, it is stated, she was present at the Italian army maneuvers—and India."

Paul's heart leaped when he read this paragraph, obscurely tucked away in a column of society gossip. How little that meant to the writer or the casual reader! To him it was everything. For it was at her place that he had left America to place his fortune and his services at the disposal of the League. He loved her, knew that his love was returned, though a world of tradition kept them asunder. He must find her.

She came to him with a suddenness that was startling. For that same afternoon, lingering as he had become accustomed to do, in the vicinity of the abandoned League offices, in the hope that Rosny would return, he was suddenly aware of a woman, heavily veiled, who stood beside him and whispered his name. Paul started and felt to trembling. He could not form the words that rushed to his lips.

"It is still closed," she said with a gasp. "And I have traveled here at such risk and all in vain. I must see Rosny, for events of the utmost importance are transpiring at home. The League is divided; all are afraid; the Kaiser himself is afraid, and Spain is too far away for help to come from that quarter. You must help me, monsieur, she said, turning suddenly upon him. 'Where can we speak?'"

Paul led the way to a little cafe not fifty feet distant.

"I must tell you something about myself," she said. "I am, as you know, one of his majesty, the Austrian emperor's, many nieces. I was brought up in the stifling atmosphere of the most ceremonial court in Europe. I was betrothed to the Archduke Stephan. I had never even seen him; I hated him. I ran away and entered Prague University, where I came under the influence of Dvornak, the real founder and inspirer of the League. I went to America to solicit your aid, and the rest is known to you. Von Holzrath is the emperor's trusted adviser. He found me in Tripoli, where the interests of the League had called me. He carried me back to Vienna, whence I escaped three days ago at imminent peril, to summon the League to fight for the sacred principle of monarchy. If Austria becomes republican—"

Paul leaned forward and took her hand in his.

"I love you, Clothilde," he said. "And you love me. That much I have from your own lips, and a princess of the house of Hapsburg does not deny her word. Leave these affairs to older and more intriguing minds; come back to America with me tonight."

She gasped and looked at him in something like admiration for his audacity. Her face softened. Then she answered frankly.

"I feel as if I should count with me for nothing at all. Whether I love or hate you, whether my word was truly spoken or nothing more than pity for you when you lay dying in the hot sands of Tripoli—all that is nothing to me now. I will never go back upon our cause nor seek for selfish happiness by such an act of self-abnegation. There is great work to be done; will you help me, monsieur, she said, in a spirit of complete self-forgetfulness, for the sake of the League? Either pledge yourself to this or leave me and never see me again."

Paul knew then that he had met his master; a cooler, yet more ardent spirit than his own. He bowed his head in token of agreement, and the next moment a startling change came over her face and she began speaking eagerly and intently.

"The emperor has not seen me since my return from Tripoli," she said. "They told me those who guarded me—that was resolved never to see me till my marriage had taken place with the Archduke Stephan. But I was not deceived. My uncle is in his dotage now; he is almost an automaton—just a weak old man doing away the last hours of his life by his frenzied and dreaming of ancient triumphs, and men and events that have long since been translated into history. He lives at Hofberg, at his hunting lodge, perpetually, he has to all intents and purposes abdicated, and all that you read of his activities is fiction. Nevertheless, he is the most important factor and the most venerated figure in Austria today."

"But the movement of democracy, that fatal error of our times, has enveloped Austria in its octopus-like tentacles. Socialism and the spirit of national separation have infected the soldiers—even the officers of the Vienna garrison. They plan to split up Austria into her original provinces. Think what that means, Paul Lane! Austria wiped off the map, a series of republican states in place of her, and monarchy will have received a wound at its heart. This must not be. The League has said it shall not be. But the League has been proscribed in many countries; it cannot meet as an entity again; none dares interfere. And four nights from tonight, on St. Bartholomew's eve, the coup will take place."

"Stephan and his aides, the officers of the Vienna garrison, who have been selected from among the Croats, Serbs, Ruthenians and other non-German elements of the empire, have planned, fifty of them, to seize his majesty in his castle at Hofberg on that evening. There are none there but the Imperial Guard and a host of timorous funkies. My uncle will be compelled to sign his abdication, and a republic will be declared under the presidency of Stephan. There will be none to offer resistance. There seems nothing to hinder the carrying out of the plan. I learned this from the lips of Stephan himself when he came to me in my prison to offer me his hand again, bragging of his approaching greatness."

"What are we to do?" asked Paul. "I shall seek out the emperor, stop his carriage and throw myself upon his mercy," said the princess. "Once in his castle, I can make arrangements to summon the loyal elements to his aid, bring home to him the meaning of the conspiracy. But had I attempted to reach him when flying from my prison I should have been captured and detained. I want merely one who will defend me, Monsieur Lane, till I can see my uncle and throw myself into his arms. We must intercept him as he is driving in his park, and make ourselves known to him."

In ten minutes she had elaborated her scheme. They set out for Vienna on the next day, traveling as a lady and her groom. On the third morning they descended from the train at the central station of Vienna, and that afternoon saw them in the vicinity of the castle of Hofberg.

"He takes his drive at four, after the heat of the day is over," said Paul's companion. "See, they are bringing up his barouche to the castle gate. Only two outriders and one of his six attendant officers will accompany him. He drives round the park; we can intercept him at the park's bridge. Come!"

Paul and his companion struck out through the undergrowth of the leafy forest, running like two children, sometimes fording a little brook, sometimes kneeling in ferns and flowery grasses. Her eyes sparkled from the exercise; she seemed to Paul the incarnation of youth and beauty and everything that was to be desired. Only the thought of the urgency of the situation prevented him from renewing his protestations.

At last they emerged upon a rustic bridge, built of hewn trunks, just as a little cloud of white in the distance betrayed the approach of the emperor's carriage. The princess motioned Paul back into the undergrowth, or to present you to his majesty," she said, and stepped forward into the middle of the road. The carriage rolled slowly on. In it, as it rounded a bend in the forest path, Paul could see a young officer, seated bolt upright, with folded arms, and at his side the aged emperor, his white head sunk on his breast, his head bent forward. He was nodding, dreaming his old life away. Suddenly the coachman saw the princess, the horses swerved, stopped, snorting, the outriders sprang to the ground, the young officer stood up, hand upon holster. But Princess Clothilde was already within the carriage and at the emperor's knees.

The old man stirred, and the dream of his half-forgotten youth vanished as his eyes opened. He started slightly, for he had thought himself back upon the battlefields of sixty years ago, fighting the rebel Magyars, a young man, full of the pride of life; and here he was a greybeard, nodding in the carriage within his park of Hofberg.

His eyes fell upon the princess, whom the young officer, recognizing, had discreetly abstained from ordering away. The old man raised her in his arms.

"Why, I am very unhappy, uncle, and I have come to stay with you," sobbed the princess. "And I have my aide with me. She looked back at Paul, who called, and Paul came forward blithely with his finger upon the brim of his hat.

"Sit up by the coachman, Paul!" said the princess.

It was less than an hour after Paul's installment in the castle when the princess' bell rang, and, passing through the swing door, he emerged upon a magnificent hall of marble, with a richly carpeted grand staircase descending toward the splendid entrance way and state banquetting rooms on the ground floor. At the head of the staircase, in the wide hall, was the emperor's suite, and at the door stood the princess. When Paul came up to her she clasped his hands warmly.

"Henceforward you are groom no longer," she said, with a rather anxious smile. "Come in, Monsieur Paul. My uncle is in a good condition now, and understands something of the plot against him. Two of his gentlemen are here, also. Come in."

Within the spacious room, warmed, though it was mid-summer, by the heat of a fire of oak logs, an old man was seated, wrapped in a dressing gown. Between his fingers he held a fountain pen, and one of his aides held his hand while he affixed his shabby signature to a pile of official documents. When Paul approached he looked up vacantly.

The old man nodded and smiled graciously.

"Excellent! Excellent!" he murmured in French. "What does he want here—a commission in the Guard? How many quarters are on his shield?"

"No, uncle, you have forgotten," said Clothilde fretfully. "You want a gentleman whom you can rely upon to convey a summons to the loyal regiment at Freiburg to hasten hither."

"It is on this paper, sir. It is only necessary to sign it," said one of the aides.

Wearily the old man signed the much coveted order; then sank back in his chair, exhausted, and presently nodded into slumber.

"Gentlemen, let me introduce you to Monsieur Lane," said the princess hastily. "Monsieur Lane—Count Von Arnim, Captain Zeller von Thurn. Monsieur Lane is fully acquainted with the desperate situation and guaranteed to reach Freiburg before midnight and have the troops brought here at once."

Does Monsieur Lane comprehend fully how desperate the situation really is? broke in Von Arnim. "Here we are, six loyal gentlemen, the sole bulwark of Austria against destruction. Even the funkies know what is to take place and are impudent to us. We can rely on none of them; we must be satisfied that the servility of their natures forbids them to offer active aid to our enemies. Well, here are we, six, the emperor's sole friends, and our enemies are so sure of success that they can calmly wait till tomorrow night to make sure of their enterprise. We are beleaguered here, Monsieur Lane; news has just come that guards have been posted outside the castle since the early afternoon, with instructions to let none in or out. The telephone wires have been cut; we have no loyal regiment that can be reached except at Freiburg. So you must leave at once, Monsieur. You know the way?"

Five minutes later, accompanied by Von Arnim, Paul was threading a way through the forest which emerged upon an unfrequented road in a suburban district upon the way to Freiburg. At this point the great wall which surrounded the castle was broken by a swift stream, fringed with thick reeds and undergrowth. Von Arnim pressed Paul's hand.

"Once safe beyond the river," he said, "you will come upon the Freiburg road. Horses and automobiles pass continually. I leave the rest to you. Watch for the sentries! Good luck!" He pressed his hand and was gone.

Paul crouched among the reeds, entered the stream noiselessly, and struck out toward the opposite shore. Five minutes later, under cover of twilight, he had passed the besieging outposts and gained the Freiburg road. He waited, dripping with water, shivering in the cool of the evening. Presently a slowly trotting pair of horses came along, drawing a barouche in which a stout elderly lady was seated. On the box was an apologetic coachman. Paul drew a pistol from his pocket, walked up, and extended his hand. The man reined in his horse. "Well, what now?" What now?" he commanded. "This is the carriage of the Baroness Blankenburg. What do you want?"

"Your horses," answered Paul, and shoved the pistol under his nose. "Run for your life, my good fellow, or—"

But the coachman needed no second invitation. As he leaped to the ground and began running away, Paul cut the traces and selected the better and swifter of the two fat beasts. From it he removed the harness, he sprang on the animal's bare back and drew it out from the wreckage of the equipment just as the Baroness awoke from her nap.

"Home, Friedrich!" she said crossly. "I shall be late, you good-for-nothing!"

Her remarks ended in a shrill scream as she grasped the situation. But Paul was already careering away through the darkness in the direction of Freiburg. At ten o'clock, and without further incident, he rode into the military cantonment and demanded immediate audience with the commander.

A display of the order, a hurried explanation, and Colonel Heller proved equal to the emergency.

"My men shall start in an hour," he trio light burned dimly at the top of the staircase, and Paul saw, to his astonishment, dim figures moving here and there, pulling great trunks of trees across the entrance to the main corridor, while Clothilde directed them. As Paul and the officers approached all ceased their labors for a moment, and the princess uttered a little cry of joy which set Paul's heart beating wildly. The barrier was already four feet high. The three climbed over, and took their stations among the defenders.

"What time does the loyal regiment arrive?" asked Captain Von Thurn, and the rest gathered round Paul in watchful expectation.

"At eight."

"It is now five. But they attack at dawn."

"That was not far away. In the dark half below the objects had already begun to assume a more distinct outline, and from the trees outside birds had begun calling.

"They will be ready to attack in half an hour," said Paul. "We must hold the staircase for two hours and a half. The back entrance?"

"Leads to the servants' quarters. But all entrances converge upon his majesty's apartments. The hall must be blocked from front and rear."

Princess Clothilde took Paul by the arm and led him along toward the other approach. "A mass of logs was already piled up ceiling high, its vast, unorganized bulk proving a formidable obstacle to any who sought to force it.

"We have left loopholes," said the princess with a grim smile, "and there are rifles and two hundred rounds for each man, which were overlooked when our servants deserted us, carrying away such plunder as they could obtain."

No more was said, but they continued to work feverishly upon the defenses. At last suddenly Captain Von Thurn stopped and looked at Paul.

"You have a sword?" he asked, and when Paul shook his head, he entered the Emperor's ante-room and returned bearing a blade of finest steel, set in a brass hilt. "It is a plain weapon," he said, "and yet his highness found it serviceable in four campaigns."

Outside it was growing light. The trees showed green against the wide windows, and birds were singing. Presently a tramping, mingled with distant cries, was heard in the courtyard.

"You place!" exclaimed Von Arnim, and they ran back and scrambled over the barricade again, where they stood grimly waiting. The sounds grew louder, hoarse shouts broke the silence; suddenly a mob of men rushed into the courtyard and hammered upon the gates.

"Silence, gentlemen!" Von Arnim said.

The hammering grew louder until the din was tremendous. Evidently the men were being brought into play. Presently the sounds ceased; then two minutes later, there was the roar of dynamite. The gates rocked and fell inward, and through the cloud of mortar and marble dust figures of men emerged. It was quite light now.

They rushed up the staircase, and suddenly perceiving the barricade and the defenders and stood still. But one man ran to the barricade, and shook his fists. It was Stephan. "Surrender!" he cried. "Our terms: your lives are spared. We demand his majesty and her highness the princess!"

"In ten seconds," responded Von Arnim, "we open fire." But he had hardly begun to count when a second man stepped forward from below and came forward up the grand staircase. Paul knew him. It was Von Holzrath. He advanced recklessly to the edge of the barricade and Paul sprang up to meet him. Von Holzrath saluted.

"Will her highness desire to retire that we may fire also?" he asked.

Paul turned. There stood Clothilde at his elbow, defiantly regarding Stephan's chief confidant.

"I shall stand here," she answered. "And if you fire, I shall be one of the victims of your bullets."

"But, mademoiselle—your highness—" murmured the captain, regarding her in a helpless manner. "You will," he said, "we shall give you the sword. A vous, monsieur!" He saluted Paul and, turning, made his way slowly down the wide staircase. He reached the hall and the defenders heard the murmur of voices. They came the rush.

Twelve abreast they bounded up the marble stairs, in ranks four deep, brandishing their swords and shouting the name of Stephan, who, Paul noticed, with a grim smile, remained in the rear most rank. That was his last conscious observation for some time, for an instant later, sword was crashing on sword-point, thrust, thrust, point. The twelve men in the first rank were expert fencers, and while they parried and thrust, those in the ranks behind them tore at the barricades, pulling and heaving at the great logs with all their strength.

Point, thrust. One of the defenders was pierced to the heart, and, as he fell, the key-lock loosened, crashed down, and, like a cat's paw, the entire structure collapsed and tumbled down the stairs, burying the slain man under it. But it tripped up the assailants, and in a moment victory declared itself for the defenders. The attacking party retired in hot haste leaving three dead behind them.

"Now, Paul, fight bravely for—"

He heard a voice in his ear. He turned, to look into the face of the princess, who, apparently devoid of fear, stood at his elbow. He was revived. As the assailants reform, charged bravely up the stairs, he singled out Von Holzrath and shouted a challenge at him. He saw the captain's eyes flash his answer, and sword in hand, waited.

Von Holzrath came toward him brandishing his sword. It clashed on Paul's. One moment they fought fiercely; the next the rush of the combatants separated them. Driven back with the defenders, Paul saw Von Holzrath slip Van Arnim through the body and twist loose his sword, as on Paul's a skewer from a joint. They were together again. Swiftly and more fierce grew the movement of his enemy's blade, outmatching his own, till it flashed before Paul's eye like a sphere of living light. It pointed, threatened, now here, now there, Paul's arm grew weary. A dozen times he laid bare his guard. Still Von Holzrath forbore to strike, but there was a sneering smile on his lips. Paul felt his strength leaving him, he thrust with all his force, he saw Von Holzrath's blade meet his and carry it point itself for the final blow, and then—

Out of the emperor's apartments were, fighting desperately for their lives, the four men stood, back against the wall, their bodies trail old man with pale, blue troubled eyes. And, as he emerged, suddenly the din grew quiet, and where there had been murderous shouts and clashing blades, there might have been a tableau in marble. The old man came into the passage and his eyes fell on the assailants, who stood before him with lowered swords. Then instinctively Franz Joseph straightened himself, his form became erect and his voice grew strong.

"Officers of the Guard!" he shouted. "The Magyars are at our gates! Follow me! Courage!"

He stooped and took a sword from the clutch of a dying man, and stood feebly wielding it, calling on the names of his great captains, dead fifty years before. The last survivor of those stirring years, he seemed like one risen from the grave. A superstitious fear fell on all present. The assailants retreated toward the head of the staircase, and, gathering there in little knots, looked with troubled eyes upon the pathetic figure of their once mighty emperor.

Suddenly without there came a trumpet call. It echoed through the halls, electrifying all into life.

"The regiment from Freiburg!" shouted the princess, and her face took on the aspect of an amazon. "You are trapped, dogs! You shall not have this! Ha! Freiburg! Austria! Secor!"

The hall below burst a detachment of the loyal regiment, their bayonets set, their fingers on the triggers of their rifles. One moment, and the assailants fled down the stairs and broke into the midst of the newcomers. They clove their way into the heart of the house, a struggling wave amid the white-coated veterans of the emperor; in a moment the hall was filled with the tumult of the new battle.

Princess Clothilde took Paul by the arm.

"You must go now, Paul," she said. "You have saved Austria and me. Your deed shall never be forgotten. Go, and I shall summon you when I need you."

"Now!" shouted Paul. "Do you think I will leave you now, to lose you when—"

He saw her eyes harden like points of steel, and bowed his head humbly to hear her answer.

"Always," said Clothilde, and for the moment her voice was tremulous. Then a great gladness came into Paul's heart. He lifted her hand to his lips and passed out through the abandoned quarters of the palace servants.

He saw the princess, wife of face, tremulous, broken.

The hall below burst a detachment of the loyal regiment, their bayonets set, their fingers on the triggers of their rifles. One moment, and the assailants fled down the stairs and broke into the midst of the newcomers. They clove their way into the heart of the house, a struggling wave amid the white-coated veterans of the emperor; in a moment the hall was filled with the tumult of the new battle.

Princess Clothilde took Paul by the arm.

"You must go now, Paul," she said. "You have saved Austria and me. Your deed shall never be forgotten. Go, and I shall summon you when I need you."

He saw her eyes harden like points of steel, and bowed his head humbly to hear her answer.

"Always," said Clothilde, and for the moment her voice was tremulous. Then a great gladness came into Paul's heart. He lifted her hand to his lips and passed out through the abandoned quarters of the palace servants.

He saw the princess, wife of face, tremulous, broken.

the desperate situation and guaranteed to reach Freiburg before midnight and have the troops brought here at once."

Does Monsieur Lane comprehend fully how desperate the situation really is? broke in Von Arnim. "Here we are, six loyal gentlemen, the sole bulwark of Austria against destruction. Even the funkies know what is to take place and are impudent to us. We can rely on none of them; we must be satisfied that the servility of their natures forbids them to offer active aid to our enemies. Well, here are we, six, the emperor's sole friends, and our enemies are so sure of success that they can calmly wait till tomorrow night to make sure of their enterprise. We are beleaguered here, Monsieur Lane; news has just come that guards have been posted outside the castle since the early afternoon, with instructions to let none in or out. The telephone wires have been cut; we have no loyal regiment that can be reached except at Freiburg. So you must leave at once, Monsieur. You know the way?"

Five minutes later, accompanied by Von Arnim, Paul was threading a way through the forest which emerged upon an unfrequented road in a suburban district upon the way to Freiburg. At this point the great wall which surrounded the castle was broken by a swift stream, fringed with thick reeds and undergrowth. Von Arnim pressed Paul's hand.

The League of Lost Causes

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

The Prisoner of Hofberg

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

ROSNY, the western secretary of the League of Lost Causes, was not in Paris. Paul Lane could not find him. The League's offices were closed and abandoned. While at the window was displayed a sign advertising that they were for rental. The landlord could give no information as to Rosny's whereabouts. He had paid his rent and departed five or six days before, more than that he did not know.

After a maddening search through Paris for nearly a week Paul saw a paragraph in a newspaper which threw a flood of light on his perplexity.

"It is rumored," said the writer, "that the Princess Clothilde will shortly be married to His Highness Archduke Stephan. The Emperor Franz Joseph, was it will be remembered, postponed some time ago on account of her highness' predilection for what may be called, without less majesty, foreign travel. It is said by the scandalously inclined, in fact, that her highness has been the heroine of more than one runaway escapade, involving America, the Tripolitanian, where, it is stated, she was present at the Italian army maneuvers—and India."

Paul's heart leaped when he read this paragraph, obscurely tucked away in a column of society gossip. How little that meant to the writer or the casual reader! To him it was everything. For it was at Serpentine that he had left America to place his fortune and his services at the league's disposal. He loved her, and knew that his love was returned, though a world of tradition kept them apart. He must find her.

She came to him with a suddenness that was startling. For that same afternoon, lingering as he had become accustomed to do, in the vicinity of the abandoned league offices, in the hope that Rosny would return, he was suddenly aware of a woman, heavily veiled, who stood beside him and whispered his name. Paul started and fell to trembling. He could not form the words that rushed to his lips.

"It is still closed!" she said with a gasp. "And I have traveled here at such risk and all in vain. I must go back, for I want to see the most important personage at home. The league is divided; all are afraid; the Kaiser himself is afraid, and Spain is too far away for help to come from that quarter. You must help me, monsieur," she said, turning suddenly upon him. "Why can we not speak?"

Paul led the way to a little cafe not fifty feet distant. "I must tell you something about myself," she said. "I am, as you know, one of his majesty, the Austrian emperor's, many titles. I was brought up in the stifling atmosphere of the most ceremonial court in Europe. I was betrothed to the Archduke Stephan. I have never even seen him. I hated him; I ran away and entered Prague University, where I came under the influence of Dvornik, the real founder and inspirer of the league. I went to America to solicit your aid—and the rest is known to you. Von Holzrath is the emperor's trusted adviser. He found me in Tripoli, where the interests of the league had called me. He carried me back to Vienna, whence I escaped three days ago at imminent peril, to summon the league to fight for the sacred principle of monarchy. If Austria becomes a republic, I am lost."

Paul leaned forward and took her hand in his. "I love you, Clothilde," he said. "And you love me. That much I have from your own lips, and a princess of the house of Hapsburg does not deny her word. Leave these affairs to older and more intriguing men. I will come back to America with me tonight."

She gasped and looked at him. In something like admiration for his audacity. Her face softened. Thence she answered frankly. "My feelings Paul Lane, count with me for nothing at all. Whether I love you or hate you, whether my word was truly spoken or nothing more than pity for you when you lay dying in the hot sands of Tripoli—all that is nothing to me now. I will never go back upon our cause nor seek for selfish happiness by such an act of self-abnegation. There are other ways to be done; will you help me, Monsieur Lane, in a spirit of complete self-forgetfulness, for the sake of the league? Either pledge yourself to this or leave me and never see me again."

Paul knew then that he had met his master; cooler, yet more ardent, his eyes had been kindled. He bowed his head in token of agreement, and the next moment a startling change came over her face and she began speaking eagerly and intently. "The emperor has not seen me since my return from Tripoli," she said. "I have told him nothing. I guarded me—that he was resolved never to see me till my marriage had taken place with the Archduke Stephan. But I was not deceived. My uncle is in his dotage now; he is almost an automaton—just a weak old man dozing away the last hours of his life by his bedside and dreaming of ancient triumphs, and men and events that have long since been translated into history. He lives at Hofberg, at his hunting lodge, perpetually; he has to all intents and purposes abdicated, and all that you read of his activities is a fiction. Nevertheless, he is the most important figure in Austria today."

"But the movement of democracy, that fatal error of our times, has enveloped Austria in its octopus-like tentacles. Socialism and the spirit of national separation have infected the soldiers—even the officers of the Vienna garrison. They plan to split Austria into her original provinces. Think what that means, Paul Lane! Austria wiped off the map, a series of republican states in place of her, and monarchy will have received a wound at its heart. This must not be. The league has said it shall not be. But the league has been pinned in many a net; it cannot meet as an entity again; none dares interfere. And four nights from tonight, on St. Bartholomew's eve, the coup will take place."

"Stephan and his aides, the officers of the Vienna garrison, who have been selected from among the Crown Prince's Ruthenians and other non-German elements of the empire, have planned, fifty of them, to seize his majesty in his castle at Hofberg on that evening. There are none there but the Imperial Guard and a host of timorous hunkers. My uncle is compelled to sign his abdication, and a republic will be declared under his presidency of Stephan. There will be none to offer resistance. There seems nothing to hinder the carrying out of the plan. I learned this from the lips of Stephan himself when he came to me in my prison to offer me his hand again, bragging of his approaching greatness."

"What are we to do?" asked Paul. "I shall seek out the emperor, stop his carriage and throw myself upon his mercy," said the princess. "Once in his castle, I can make arrangements, summon the loyal element to his aid, bring home to him the meaning of the conspiracy. But had I attempted to reach him when flying from my prison I should have been captured and detained. I want merely one who will defend me, Monsieur Lane, till I can see my uncle and throw myself into his arms. We must intercept him as he is driving in his park, and make ourselves known to him."

In ten minutes she had elaborated her scheme. They set out for Vienna on the next day, traveling as a lady and her groom. On the third morning they descended from the train at the central station of Vienna, and that afternoon saw the emperor in the vicinity of the castle of Hofberg. "He takes his drive at four, after the heat of the day is over," said Paul's companion. "See, they are bringing up his baroque to the castle gate. Only two outriders and one of his six attendant officers will accompany him. He drives round the park, we can intercept him at the Faun's bridge. Come!"

Hand in hand they struck out through the undergrowth of the leafy forest, running like two children, sometimes fording a little brook, sometimes kneedeep in ferns and flowery grasses. Her eyes sparkled from the exercise; she counted to Paul the intricacies of youth and beauty and everything that was to be desired. Only the thought of the urgency of the situation prevented him from renewing his protestations.

At last they emerged upon a rustic bridge, built of hewn trunks, just as a little cloud of white in the distance betrayed the approach of the emperor's carriage. The princess motioned Paul back into the undergrowth. "Come when I call, whether for aid or to present you to his majesty," she said, and stepped forward into the middle of the road. The carriage rolled slowly on. In it, as it rounded a bend in the forest path, Paul could see a young officer, seated bolt upright, with folded arms, and at his side the aged emperor, his white beard sunk on his breast, his head bent forward. He was nodding, dreaming his old life away. Suddenly the coachman saw the princess, the horses swerved, stopped, snorting; the outriders, a young man, and the emperor's footmen stood up, hand upon holster. But Princess Clothilde was already within the carriage and at the emperor's knees.

"Uncle! Uncle Franz!" she cried, embracing him in tears.

ious smile. "Come in, Monsieur Paul. My uncle is in a good condition now, and understands something of the plot against him. Two of his gentlemen are here, also. Come in!"

Within the spacious room, warmed, though it was mid-summer, by the heat of a fire of oaklogs, an old man was seated, draped in a dressing gown. Between his fingers he held a fountain pen, and one of his aides held his hand while he affixed his shaky signature to a pile of official documents. When Paul approached he looked up vacantly.

The old man nodded and smiled graciously. "Excellent! Excellent!" he murmured. "What does he want?"

"He is a commission in the Guard," he said. "How many quarters are on his shield?"

"No, uncle, you have forgotten," said Clothilde fretfully. "You want a gentleman whom you can rely upon to convey a summons to the loyal regiment at Freiburg to hasten forth."

"It is on this paper, sir. It is only necessary to sign it," said one of the aides.

Wearily the old man signed the much coveted order; then sank back in his chair, exhausted, and presently nodded into slumber.

He waited, dripping with water, shivering in the cool of the evening. Presently a slowly trotting pair of horses came along, drawing a baroque in which a stout elderly lady, the coachman, Paul drew a pistol from his pocket, walked up, and extended his hand. The man reined in.

"Well, what now? What now?" he commanded. "This is the carriage of the Baroness Blankenburg. What do you want?"

"Your horses," answered Paul, and shoved the pistol under his nose. "Run for your life, my good fellow, or I will shoot you."

But the coachman needed no second invitation. As he leaped to the ground and began running away, Paul, the traces and selected into the back of the two, fast beasts. From it he removed the harness; he sprang on the animal's bare back and drew it out from the wreckage of the equipment just as the Baroness awoke from her nap.

Her remarks ended in a shrill scream as she grasped the situation. But Paul was already cantering away through the darkness in the direction of Freiburg. At ten o'clock and wither and swifter of the two, fast beasts. THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

One of the most fertile subjects for conjecture and argument at the present time is the high cost of living. Any man who has ever showed any symptom of having the ability to reason has figured it out to his own satisfaction and can tell his neighbor just where the trouble lies.

One man who has looked up the figures finds that the colossal sum of $2,000,000,000 has been collected by the federal government since its organization and that $18,900,000,000 of this amount has been spent in making, and paying for war, and facts, in his opinion, explain the high cost of living.

Other men have compared the cost of farm products on the farm with price that the consumer has to pay for them and they have deduced the fact that the high cost of living is directly due to the huge profits that the middleman is pulling down.

Other men have looked up the amount of money that is spent for advertising each year, and they have decided that this is the reason why living is high, for the cost of advertising has to be paid by the ultimate consumer.

Others have prepared statistics on the saloon business, apportioning out the amount that each man, woman, and child has to contribute each year and the figures are so appalling that they blame the grog shop for the high cost of living.

Another man has figured it out that the enormous production of gold during the past few years has cheapened that commodity and the result is that it takes more money to buy a given amount of the necessities of life.

Then there are some that think it is due to moving picture shows, traveling salesmen, the tendency of people to want only the best of everything. The socialists say it is because the monopolists hog all the profits, and the democrats blame it onto the extravagance of past administrations, and the republicans claim it is because so many people are buying automobiles instead of putting their money out at interest.

It may be possible that all of the things enumerated above contribute their share toward the high cost of living, and the elimination of any one of them, were it possible, would only be a drop in the bucket. It is a fact that this is a progressive age. We are going in strong for education, and when you educate a man along one line you educate him along all lines.

You cannot lift the masses out of the gutter on wind alone; it takes something substantial. If you educate your workman and expand his knowledge of things in general, you at the same time expand his capacity and desire for spending money, for the things higher up in this world are not obtainable for a son of a gun unless you are a better slinger than most of us. You cannot pay a workman a dollar a day and then expect to have him see the good things of life and partake of them along with the fellow who is pulling down ten dollars or more a day.

Maybe the high cost of living is only another evidence that we are advancing from year to year and that the producer is receiving a better recompense for his labor; or at least demanding a better one, and in many instances he is getting it. The indications are that in spite of all efforts to the contrary, the cost of living will continue to advance.

INCOME TAX.

The moneyed interests are worrying about the income tax they will now have to pay, instead of feeling thankful that heretofore they were permitted to rake in everything in sight without contributing their just share toward the expense of government. They are saying all kinds of hard things about the income tax. J. W. E. A. of the Tribune, formerly of Marinette, now one of the dollars in Milwaukee, says it is an imposition and has "no head or tail to it." Sure thing it is an imposition—it imposes a tax—and in the right place at that. —Peshigo Times (Rep.)

According to the Madison Democrat, a new commission is to be added to the big bunch already on the list. It is the "Bedbug Commission." A Madison dispatch states that a research researcher in the "new big $200,000 bugology building will take up the study of the bedbug to discover his business of a better brand of bedbug at once be in order. Let us hope that they will succeed in discovering a kind of bedbug which will work in the day time and sleep at night, as any honest bug should do. —Neenah Times.

President Nixon, of the "Trisco road, is said to have begun life as a carpenter at $1.25 a day. And had he always been content to strictly observe union labor rules he probably would still be working at the trade. —Oshkosh Northwestern.

—Mrs. F. P. Daly expects another carload of pianos about the 20th of this month. They will be from the famous Cable company, and as this is about the time of year to begin to look up a Christmas present, it might be a good thing for anybody who has anything of this sort on their mind to go around and see Mrs. Daly about the matter. There is nothing nicer for a Christmas present than a piano, as it will please every member of the household. It will not cost a cent to investigate the matter. Terms and prices will be right.

Echo of the Circus.
"Oh, mamma," shouted little Eddie, as he ran to his mother in great glee, "what do you think? I was just over there where they're putting up the circus, and they're filling the ring all full of breakfast food."

COAXING BIDDY TO LAY
THOSE HIGH PRICED EGGS.

"A few years ago many farmers allowed their cows to go dry early in November and then freshen in April. The farm hen sometimes does the same thing—goes dry in October and begins to lay in March. This long dry spell cuts down the possible profits. This is the explanation given by James G. Halpin, poultryman for the College of Agriculture, of the present scarcity of eggs.

Mr. Halpin thinks that many farm flocks are not getting quite the attention that they really deserve and as a consequence are not meeting the demand for freshly laid eggs.

"Right now poultry houses should be deeply bedded with dry straw," declares Mr. Halpin, "and all the grain feed should be worked into this bed so that the hens may get good exercise and amusement during the winter. If nothing of this kind is done, the flock will huddle in one corner of the poultry house or in or about one of the other farm buildings and will seem to lose all interest in life. If the flock gets into this lazy and indifferent habit at this time of the year, winter eggs will be few and hard to get. It is well to get the hens to exercising and singing as they work for their feed and then sell fifty-cent eggs to the city buyers who want the genuine article.

"The flock should be given as great a variety of grain as possible, some corn, wheat, oats and barley mixed together, or fed alternately makes a satisfactory ration. If all of these grains are not produced on the farm, then feed these that are raised. On real cold nights take some corn into the house, thoroughly heat it, upon the kitchen stove, then break it up into small pieces and scatter over the feeding floor an hour or more before dark. Arrange a mash box or trough with a little ground feed where the hens may have access to it. They can then go to the 'pantry' and get 'a bite' to eat when the grain is gone from the litter. A warm mash of moist, ground feed, table scraps, etc., fed so that all of the flock has access to it and only what they will eat greedily in fifteen minutes is good for laying hens.

"As insects are no longer available skim milk should be fed liberally. If this is not obtainable feed some ground corn, hoot or oat, about as once to each hen three times a week. If unable to provide any of these, buy commercial meat scrap for animal feed of some sort helps to fill the gap."

An "International" Investment.

Contrary to the generally accepted belief the exhibitions of live stock in the United States are the greatest in the world. Not only are the displays of animal excellence themselves superior to all others, but the equipment for the staging of the shows and the accommodation of the visiting public is far better and more comprehensive than in any other country. Vast improvements have been made the past year in the setting of the International Live Stock Exposition, which will this year be held from November 19 to December 6. Concentrated, thorough and sanitary stabling and display of the animals, commodious lecture halls, a magnificent exhibition arena, together with all necessary comforts for visitors—all, as it might be said, beneath one roof—form a combination not hitherto contemplated in connection with any live stock show.

In no other country is the show yard so closely associated with the national educational system, in none is the whole scheme and plan of exhibition arranged so that each season's prize winners may be brought before a court of last resort for final alignment, as at the "International," which will this year be held from November 29 to December 6. Here alone of all the great world's shows may the best of all useful breeds of farm animals be seen in their foremost estate in one grand display.

In the United States we have the best, and the best of the best may be seen each year at the "International." Many foreign countries have great individual exhibitions, but by common consent of all the world's highest authorities, the "International" is an easy leader. At this show may be seen the pick of the foremost foreign breeds massed together well nigh beneath a single roof.

Gathered in their thousands at the greatest railway center in the world, the animals at the "International" offer a liberal education in themselves to all who care to study them. Here all of our master breeders, and many from foreign climes, take their annual courses. Money paid out in attending the show is regarded by them as the most profitable, sound and remunerative investment they can make.

To keep up with the trend of live stock breeding, the farmer and stockman must needs attend the "International." He must study the work of the judges, and if he cares to, he may learn from the lips of these judges their reasons which governed their awards.

It is a show by the people, for the people, of the people. Its guiding principle is the greatest good to the greatest number. It offers a matchless opportunity to study, to learn, to meet and know the master minds in live stock circles. Any farmer who fails to attend the "International" deliberately deprives himself of an asset—a valuable asset which in after years would have bulked large in his store of knowledge and beyond peradventure in his bank account also.

IT IS ORDERED, That the time from the date hereof until and including the 2nd day of June, A. D. 1914, be and the same is hereby fixed as the time within which all creditors of the said Ellery V. Baldwin deceased, shall present their claims for examination and allowance.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That all claims and demands of all persons against the said Ellery V. Baldwin deceased, be examined and adjusted before this court at its Court Room in the Court House in the City of Grand Rapids, on the 2nd day of June, 1914, at 10 o'clock a. m., and all creditors are hereby notified thereof.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That notice of the time and place for the examination and adjustment of claims and demands, be given by publishing for sale three consecutive weeks, in each week, in the Grand Rapids Tribune, a newspaper published in said County of Wood, the first publication to be within fifteen days of the date hereof.

Dated this 25th day of Nov. 1913.
By the Court:
W. J. CONWAY, County Judge.

New cattle barn just completed at the Wood County asylum. Its dimensions are 36x126 feet with 14-foot posts and 9-foot basement, arranged with all the latest barn equipments with two large twin silos made by the Vesper Silo Co. Without a doubt this is the finest barn to be seen anywhere in upper Wisconsin.

Beef Cattle Becoming Scarce.

Merlin Hull in Black River Falls Journal.—At the close of four years more, if the present rate of decrease in the number of cattle continues, there will be only half as many beef animals in the United States as there was six years ago, while the population of the country will have increased by twenty millions over what it was at the beginning of the ten-year period. The outlook must be far from pleasing for the people of large cities, who now pay very high prices for anything in the meat line. But the "opportunity for the Wisconsin farmer to engage in stock raising was never better. Sheep raising for mutton will also take on new life as an industry, and hogs and poultry will be in greater demand than ever. As the nation must eat, regardless of financial conditions, the farmers have a safe proposition in going into the production of meat animals, and there is small probability of over production for many years to come.

While the situation is becoming acute so far as the meat supply is concerned, it might hardly have been foreseen. With rural counties falling off in population in consequence of the rush to the cities, farming has not kept pace with the industrial growth. Then the beef trust has insisted on taking all the profit on beef animals for many years. Many farmers have retired of feeding corn and hay to a monopoly, and have gone into dairying and other branches of farming.

Some day our city friends will understand that their greatest problem of the future lies in the rural districts, which have fed their wealth to the cities for a century and until farming conditions become acute. Now the result of these years is being felt. Farmers are getting more and more for their products, but with the increase in land values, the onward march of taxation and the difficulty of securing farm help, there must come still greater profits in farming before the development of agriculture will commence to keep pace with the growth of our large industrial centers.

A MAN EATS FIFTY-FOUR TONS OF FOOD IN LIFETIME.

An English scientist with a passion for statistics has been computing the amount of food that the average man eats in a lifetime. He asserts that in the process of attaining his three score years and ten he eats about fifty-four tons of solid food and fifty-three tons of liquid.

He will have eaten 12,000 eggs, 400 pounds of cheese, about four tons of fish, and, could it have been all baked at once, a loaf of bread equal in size to an ordinary family hotel.

But think of the vegetables devalued the week at home.

Our scientist says a train three miles long would be required to bring a life's supply to the average man.—New York World.

What Horse-Power Is.

When we say that an engine develops 100 horse-power we do not mean that one hundred horses could produce the same result. And, as the editor of Power remarks, there are few engineers who could tell just how the term "horse-power" came into use. Its origin is related in the following quotation from "Farey on the Steam Engine," published in 1827:

"The machinery in the great breweries and distilleries in London was then moved by the strength of horses, and the proprietors of those establishments who were first to require what number of horses an intended engine would be equal to.

"In consequence, Mr. Watt made some experiments on the strong horses employed by the brewers in London, and found that a horse of that kind, walking at the rate of two and one-half miles per hour, could draw 150 pounds avoirdupois by means of a rope passing over a pulley, so as to raise up that weight with a vertical motion, at the rate of 220 feet per minute. This exertion of mechanical power is equal to 33,000 pounds (or 528 cubic feet) of water raised vertically through a space of 1 foot per minute, and he denominated it a horse power, to serve for a measure of the power exerted by his steam engines."

This estimate is much beyond the capacity of the average strong horse, says Power. Smeaton and other early engineers estimated that 22,000 pounds per minute was more accurate.—New York World.

Millions in Poultry.

The value of poultry and poultry products on farms in 1912 in the United States amounted to the princely sum of $570,000,000. That amount equaled three-fifths of the value of the cotton crop proper.

It exceeded the value of the wheat crop by $14,720,000.

It exceeded the value of the oats crop by $117,537,000.

It was more than ten times the value of the wool crop.

It equaled two-thirds the value of the hay crop.

It exceeded the value of the potato crop by $357,450,000.

It exceeded the value of the swine of the entire country by $46,672,000.

It exceeded in value all the miles of the country by $44,343,000.

It equaled quite 70 per cent of the value of all the milk cows of the country.

And it also equaled quite 73 per cent of the farm value of all the "other cattle" of the country.—New York Sun.

"The Deep Purple" was played at Daly's Theatre last Thursday evening to a fair sized audience. It was hailed as a good play, and it came up to the expectations of those who went to see it. While it showed up
some of the evils of city life and the graft practiced by the police of large cities, it was not so gruesome a character as many of these dramas
that are supposed to carry a moral or show up an evil. Then there was some humor scattered thru it and it had a happy ending, all of which had a tendency to send the spectator home
with a better taste in his mouth. Altogether it was a most satisfactory
play, and the different characters were pretty generally taken in a forceful manner.

Mrs. George Mosart of Green Bay
was a guest of her sister, Mrs. Fred Warner Sunday.
Ralph Cole departed Monday evening for Texas to join his parents who moved out there several weeks ago.
Robert Skeel of Cranmoor was a

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Rick entertained a party of friends at a venison super on Sunday evening. Covers were laid for twelve and a very pleasant evening was spent by those in attendance.
Mike Sierck who sold his farm in the town of Sigel the past week has purchased the A. N. Palmer home on

Mr. and Mrs. John T. Pagel of the town of Rudolph have issued invitations to the wedding of their daughter Emma to Andrew Schultz which is to occur on Thursday morning, December 24th, at eleven o'clock at the St. John's Lutheran church in Rudolph.
Former Sheriff Mike Griffin of Marshfield was in the city on Friday
and while here favored the Tribune
office with a pleasant call. Mr. Griffin has been on the road most of the time during the past season, but makes his home at Marshfield the same as ever.

J. C. Bueimier of the town of Hansen was among the pleasant callers
at the Tribune office on Thursday
while in the city on business. Mr.
Bueimier is offering his farm in the town of Hanson for sale, an ad for which will be found in another column of the Tribune. Mr. Bueimier spent several years in the state of Virginia, and was rather pleased with the country down there, and if he sells his farm will probably return
there to make his home.
A novel feature with "The District Leader" which will be seen at the Daly
Theatre, Friday, Nov. 28, is a moving picture of Flossie Whittle making a wild ride from New York to Yonk-

film shows the continuation of the story and is a decided novelty. It was posed for by Beatrice More who plays

The county board adjourned on Thursday after having been in session
since Tuesday of the previous week.
Among the matters that came up for discussion was a talk on the road improvement thruout the county, which was given a pretty thorough thrashing
out by the members. There was a disposition on the part of some of the members to discontinue work on the trunk line between this city and Marshfield, but when the matter was voted on it was decided to continue the work as started. In view of the fact that this is a road that is badly needed and on which considerable money has already been spent, it was better to continue the work as it had first been mapped out. In fact, more of the board seem to be in favor of the road now than there was when it was first brought up.

NO MORE PRIZES
SELLING STAMPS
MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 10. (Special)—Prizes for the sale of Red Cross
Christmas Seals will not be given this year by the Wisconsin Anti-Tuberculosis Association. Several thousand dollars worth of prizes, donated for the purpose by manufacturers of vacuum cleaners and other sanitary devices have been the most successful
in this country, and the results of this change in policy will be watched with
much interest.
"The giving of valuable prizes has helped largely in making the sale of Christmas Seals in Wisconsin the largest per capita of population in the United States," said Otto F. Bradley, Campaign Manager of the Association,
"but we feel that they are no longer needed either to stimulate effort, or
for purposes of publicity. The vital importance to the people of the anti-tuberculosis Association crusade and
the accomplishments of the Wisconsin
Anti-Tuberculosis Association are both sufficiently well known now to demand the support of the general public."
"Before a decision was reached in making this change questionnaires were sent to a thousand managers and teachers in the state. The replies were almost equally divided advising the continuing and discontinuing of the state
prizes, though there was a slight majority in favor of the latter. It is expected that managers will arrange for
the giving of prizes locally, but none
will be offered for competition between different cities and villages."
"Greetings for Thanksgiving."
Not many generations ago where you now sit encircled with all that exalts and embellishes civilized life,
the rank thistle nodded in the breeze,
the fox and coyote went about unscarred.
Here lived and loved another race of beings—Beneath the same sun that shines on us so brightly the Indian hunter pursued the panting deer. Gazing on the same moon that smiles for us, the Indian lover wooed his dusky mate.
Here the wigwam blaze beamed on
the tender and helpless, and the council fire glared on the painted warrior.
Here, too, they worshipped, and
from many a dusky bosom, went up a fervent prayer to the Great Spirit (Mantou) he had not written his laws for them on tablets of stone—but he had traced them on the tablets of their hearts.
The poor child of nature knew not
the God of Revelation—but the God
of the Universe he acknowledged in every thing around.
And all this passed away, across
the ocean came a pilgrim bark bearing the seeds of life and death. The former were sown for you, the latter sprung up in the path of the painted warrior. Art has usurped the bowers
of nature and the children of education have been too powerful for the tribes of the ignorant.
The character of a great continent
has changed and blotted forever from
its face a whole peculiar people.
And on this glorious Thanksgiving
day we hope it may bring back better blessings than those of old that it may win parted friends from their alienation—that it may heal all jealousies,
that it may strengthen our principles,
not for envy or greed—but for Universal Christian Brotherhood.
And in the name of God, we are truly thankful this day that we are living in a land where Peace, Union,
and Liberty abound, now and forever.
Things to Forget.
If you see a tall fellow ahead of a crowd
A leader of men, marching fearless
and proud.
And you know of a tale whose metre telling aloud
Would cause his proud head to in anguish be bowed.
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.
If you know of a skeleton hidden
away
In a closet and guarded and kept
from the day
In the dark and whose showings
whose sudden display,
Would cause grief and sorrow and
lifelong dismay.
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.
If you know of a thing that will dark-
en the joy
Of a man or a woman, a girl or a boy.
That will wipe out a smile or the
least way annoy
A fellow, or cause any gladness to ecluse.
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

Cure for Obesity.
There are few more baffling things
with which a physician has to deal
than a tendency to obesity. A non-fat-producing diet will often work wonders. But sometimes it does not, and there are a great number of people
who will not have their table enjoyments ruthlessly cut down. Obesity means simply a low oxygen supply to
the tissues, or rather lowered power
of combustion. Literally the fat does not burn. In many cases this may amount practically to a disease and results in mountains of fat equally distressing to wear or to see. For people
so afflicted a cure of remarkable simplicity has recently been found. This is simply a subcutaneous injection of solutions of colloidal palladium. Palladium is one of the rare metals of the platinum group, and may be reduced to a powder of remarkable fineness, which possesses very high oxidizing
powers. When the metal is pulverized
under water it will form a thin, glue-
like solution, and when this is injected into tissues it raises the powers of the body to burn the fat in a remarkable
way. This must be done with circumspection, however, because in very fat
people the heart works under a condition of strain; and if this strain is suddenly taken off, serious consequences may follow. The reduction of flesh, therefore, should be slow and with careful attention to the heart action.
Under this condition it brings relief
to a very real affliction.—Collier's Weekly.

"The Deep Purple" was played at Daly's Theatre last Thursday evening to a fair sized audience. It was heralded as a good play, and it came
up to the expectations of those who
some of the evils of city life and the grat practiced by the police of large cities, it was not of so gruesome a character as many of these dramas that are supposed to cure a moral or show the evil. Then there was some humor scattered thru it and it
had a happy ending, all of which had
a tendency to send the spectator home
with a better taste in his mouth. Altogether it was a most satisfactory
pretty generally taken in a forceful
manner.

Albert Denier, who plays Exra
Whittle, the milkman, with "The District Leader" at the Daly Theatre Fri-

NO MORE PRIZES SELLING STAMPS

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 10. (Special)—Prizes for the sale of Red Cross
Christmas Seals will not be given this year by the Wisconsin Anti-Tuberculosis Association. Several thousand dollars worth of prizes, donated for
the purpose by manufacturers of vacuum cleaners and other sanitary devices, have been the most successful
in this country, and the results of this
much interest.

"The giving of valuable prizes has helped largely in making the sale of Christmas Seals in Wisconsin the largest per capita of population in the United States," said Otto P. Bradley, Campaign Manager of the Association,
"but we feel that they are no longer
needed either to stimulate effort, or
for purposes of publicity. The vital importance to the people of the anti-tuberculosis Association and the accomplishments of the Wisconsin
Anti-Tuberculosis Association are both
sufficiently well known now to demand the support of the general public."

"Before a decision was reached in making this change questionnaires were sent to a thousand managers and teachers in the state. The replies were almost equally divided advising the continuing and discontinuing of the state
prizes, though there was a slight majority in favor of the latter. It is expected that managers will arrange for
the giving of prizes locally, but none
will be offered for competition between
different cities and villages."

Not many generations ago where you now sit enraptured with all that exalts and embellishes civilized life, the rank thistle nodded in the breeze, the fox and coyote went about unafraid, Here lived and loved another race of
beings—Beneath the same sun that shines on us so brightly the Indian hunter pursued the painting deer, Gazing on the same moon that smiles for you, the Indian loved won his dusky
mate.

Here the wigwam blaze beamed on
the tender and helpless, and the council fire glared on the painted warrior.

Here, too, they worshipped, and
from many a dusky bosom, went up a fervent prayer to the Great Spirit (Manitou) he had not written his laws
for them on tablets of stone, but he had traced them on the tables of their hearts.

The poor child of nature knew not
the God of Revelation—but the God
of the Universe he acknowledged in
every thing around.

And all this passed away, across
the ocean came a pilgrim bark bearing the seeds of life and death. The
former were sown for you, the latter
sprung up in the path of the painted
warrior. Art has usurped the bowers
of nature and the children of education have been too powerful for the
tribes of the ignorant.

The character of a great continent
has changed and blotted forever from
its face a whole peculiar people.

And on this glorious Thanksgiving
day we hope it may bring back better
blessings than those of old that it may
win parted friends from their alienation—that it may heal all jealousies,
that it may strengthen our principles
not for envy or greed—but for Universal Christian Brotherhood.

And in the name of God, we are
truly thankful this day that we are
living in a land where Peace, Union,
and Liberty abound, now and forever.

Things to Forget.
If you see a tall fellow ahead of a
crowd
A leader of men, marching fearless
and proud,
And you know of a tale whose mere
telling aloud
Would cause his proud head to in anguish be bowed,
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

If you know of a skeleton hidden
away
In a closet and guarded and kept
from the day
In the dark and whose showing
whose sudden display,
Would cause grief and sorrow and
lifelong dismay,
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

If you know of a thing that will dark-
en the joy
Of a man or a woman, a girl or a
boy,
That will wipe out a smile or the
least way annoy
A fellow, or cause any gladness to
eclips,
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

tic. For sale by Johnson & Hill Co. 4t.

Daly's Theatre last Thursday evening to a fair sized audience. It was heralded as a good play, and it came
up to the expectations of those who
some of the evils of city life and the gratification of the police of large cities, it was not of so great a character as many of these dramas
that are supposed to carry a moral
or show up an evil. Then there was
some humor scattered thru it and it
had a happy ending, all of which had
a tendency to send the spectator home
with a better taste in his mouth. Altogether it was a most satisfactory
pretty generally taken in a forceful
manner.

Albert Denier, who plays Ezra Whittle, the milkman, with "The District Leader" at the Daly Theatre Friday, Nov. 28, enjoys the distinction of having played the same part for five consecutive seasons, having missed only one act of one performance during this time. Denier's success in a train going into Oshkosh one morning.
He took the next train and got into Oshkosh just in time to make up for the second act, his under study having played the first. The cast of "The District Leader," this season is even better than it was at any other time.
In cutting the time of the performance
so as to comply with the two a night limit the most of three acts have been put into four scenes. All of the big hit numbers and some new ones make the musical and scenic attraction in a class by itself. The production is the same as used with the original $1.50 show. Prices 25, 35, 50, 75c.
1st four rows $1.00.

Mrs. George Mossart of Oriskany Bay
was a guest of her sister, Mrs. Fred Warner Sunday.

ning for Texas to join his parents who
moved out there several weeks ago.

Robert Skeel of Cranmoor was a business visitor in the city on Tuesday. This office acknowledges a pleasant call.

Mrs. Rose Ocan of Red Granite is visiting at the home of her son, Louis Ocan. Mrs. Nell Sorenson of Red Granite is also a guest at the Ocan home.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Rick entertained a party of friends at a venison supper on Sunday evening. Covers were laid for twelve and a very pleasant evening was spent by those in attendance.

Mike Slerck who sold his farm in the town of Sigel the past week has purchased the A. N. Farnish home on Fourth avenue north of Dr. A. L.
Hidgman and expects to move into the city next week.

Health is your greatest asset and sickness your greatest liability. Children insure you the opportunity to be well. It removes the cause of disease. Take spinal adjustments and be convinced. F. T. Hoff, Chiropractor over Daly Drug Store.

Will Nollis has resigned his position with the telephone company and gone to Port Edwards where he has accepted a position with the Nekoma-Edwards Paper company at a considerable increase. In pay. He started in on his new duties on Saturday.

C. E. LaVigne writes the Tribune from Chicago to the effect that he is out on field work for the government in the department of Commerce, and expects to be engaged in this for several weeks, and as a consequence it will be several months before he will be at home again in Washington.

Musical Comedy, Friday at Daly's.

Mr. and Mrs. John T. Pagel of the town of Rudolph have issued invitations to the wedding of their daughter Emma to Andrew Schultz, which is to occur on Thursday morning, December 24th, at eleven o'clock at the St. John's Lutheran church in Rudolph.

Former Sheriff Mike Griffin of Marshfield was in the city on Friday
and while here favored the Tribune
office with a pleasant call. Mr. Griffin has been on the road most of the
time during the past season, but makes
his home at Marshfield the same as
ever.

—For Sale, Rent or Exchange, a good 140 acre farm close to school, church and market. Good set of buildings. See Edward Pomainville, the Real Estate Man over Otto's Drug Store.

J. C. Bueimier of the town of Hansen was among the pleasant callers
at the Tribune office on Thursday
while in the city on business. Mr.
Bueimier is offering his farm in the Bueimier place for sale, an ad for which will be found in another column of the Tribune. Mr. Bueimier
spent several years in the state of Virginia, and was rather pleased with
sells his farm will probably return
there to make his home.

A neatly feature, with "The District
Leader" which will be seen at the Daly
Theatre, Friday, Nov. 28, is a moving picture of Missie Whittle making
a wild ride from New York to Yonkers to intercept Tim Halloran. This film shows the continuation of the story and is a decided novelty. It was staged by Beatrice More who plays the role of Missie Whittle, and John Wendling, the sweet voiced Tenor, who does Tim Halloran. Bargain prices 25 to 75c all reserved.

The county board adjourned on Thursday after having been in session
since Tuesday of the previous week.
Among the matters that came up for
discussion was a talk on the road improvement through the county, which was given a pretty thorough thrashing
out by the members. There was a disposition on the part of some of the members to discontinue work on the trunk line through this city and Marshfield, but when the matter was voted on it was decided to continue
the work as started. In view of the fact that this is a road that is badly needed, and on which considerable
money has already been spent, it was
first been mapped out. In fact, more
of the board seem to be in favor of the road now than there was when
it was first brought up.

needed either to stimulate effort, or
for purposes of publicity. The vital importance to the people of the anti-tuberculosis Association crusade and
the accomplishments of the Wisconsin
Anti-Tuberculosis Association are both
sufficiently well known now to demand the support of the general public."

"Before a decision was reached in making this change questionable were sent to a thousand managers and teachers in the state. The replies were almost equally divided advising the continuing and discontinuing of the state
prizes, though there was a slight majority in favor of the latter. It is expected that managers will arrange for
the giving of prizes locally, but none
will be offered for competition between
different cities and villages."

"Greetings for Thanksgiving."
(contributed.)

Not many generations ago where you now sit enfolded with all that exalts and embellishes civilized life, the
rank thistle nodded in the breeze, the fox and coyote went about unscared,
here lived and loved another race of
beings—Beneath the same sun that shines on us so brightly the Indian
hunter pursued the panting deer. Gazing on the same moon that smiles for you, the Indian lover wooed his dusky
mate.

Here the wigwam blaze beamed on
the tender and helpless, and the council fire glared on the painted warrior.
Here, too, they worshipped, and
from many a dusky bosom, went up a fervent prayer to the Great Spirit
(Manitou) he had not written his laws for them on tables of stone—but he had traced them on the tables of their hearts.

The poor child of nature knew not
the God of Revelation—but the God
of the Universe he acknowledged in everything around.

And all this passed away, across
the ocean came a pilgrim bark bearing the seeds of life and death. The former were sown for you, the latter
sprung up in the path of the painted
warrior. Art has usurped the bowers
of nature and the children of education have been too powerful for the
tribes of the ignorant.

The character of a great continent
has changed and blotted forever from his face a whole peculiar people.

And on this glorious Thanksgiving
day we hope it may bring back better
blessings than those of old that it may
win parted friends from their alienation—that it may heal all jealousies,
that it may strengthen our principles,
not for envy or greed—but for Universal Christian Brotherhood.

And in the name of God, we are
truly thankful this day that we are living in a land where Union, Liberty
and Liberty abound, now and forever.

Things to Forget.

If you see a tall fellow ahead of a
crowd
A leader of men, marching fearless
and proud
And you know of a tale whose mere
telling aloud
Would cause his proud head to in anguish be bowed
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

If you know of a skeleton hidden
away
In a closet and guarded and kept
from the day
In the dark and whose showing
would cause sudden display Would cause grief and sorrow and
lifelong dismay
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

If you know of a thing that will dark-
en the joy
Of a man or a woman, a girl or a
boy
That will wipe out a smile or the
least way annoy
Yellow, or cause any gladness to eclips
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

Cure for Obesity
There are few more baffling things
with which a physician has to deal
than a tendency to obesity. A non-fat
producing diet will often work wonders. But sometimes it does not, and there are a great number of people
who will not have their table enjoy-
ments ruthlessly cut down. Obesity
means simply a low oxygen supply to
the tissues, or rather lowered power
of combustion. Literally the fat does not burn. In many cases this may amount practically to a disease and results in mountain of fat slowly distressing to wear or to see. For people
so afflicted a cure of remarkable simplicity has recently been found. This
is simply a subcutaneous injection of
solutions of colloidal palladium. Palladium is one of the rare metals of the platinum group, and may be reduced to a powder of remarkable fineness,

which possesses very high oxidizing
powers. When the metal is pulverized
under water it will form a thin, glue-
like solution; and when this is injected
into tissues it raises the powers of the body to burn the fat in a remarkable
way. This must be done with circum-
spection, however, because in very fat
people the heart works under a condition of strain; and if this strain is
suddenly taken off, serious consequences may follow. The reduction of flesh,
therefore, should be slow and with
careful attention to the heart action.
Under this condition it brings relief

BLINDNESS.

According to excellent authority, there are 100,000 cases of blindness in the United States. Estimating that Wisconsin has a proportionate share of this number, as it no doubt has, there are 2,500 blind in this state. A New York commission which investigated one thousand cases affirmed that one-third of them were preventable. Undoubtedly a similar investigation in Wisconsin would arrive at the same conclusion.

One of the great causes of blindness is infection of the baby's eyes during birth. Leading oculists state that one-fourth of all blindness is due to this infection. Such blindness is absolutely preventable. Indeed, if the laws of the state are complied with, all cases of this nature in Wisconsin will henceforth be prevented.

The preventive measures are exceedingly simple, merely requiring the use of harmless eye drops immediately after the birth of the infant. To prevent any oversight which might be responsible for a baby's eyesight, parents should positively know that this precaution has been taken by the attendant.

The existence of 2,500 blind citizens constitutes a drag anchor upon public and family resources and prosperity. Public relief is almost inevitable. Modern competition is such that it is a healthy man's job to keep ahead of his creditors. Few handicapped individuals can be expected to do so.

Blindness is incurable. The only hope is in prevention. To prevent the mass of individual cases, each individual case must be prevented.

NEWS ITEMS FROM NEARBY PLACES

Killed by Auto—Henry Goertz, aged thirteen years, a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Goertz, was killed by a motor car, Thursday morning.

When his bicycle collided with an automobile driven by Dr. D. T. Jones. The accident was unavoidable. Dr. Jones and Dr. J. R. Bryant were going west on Clinton street and the boy was going east. At first avenue a box car obstructed the view and they came together at the corner.

One wheel of the automobile partly passed over the boy's body and injured him internally. He died the next morning. Coroner H. M. Pringle made an investigation which resulted in the complete exhumation of Dr. Jones. The boy was injured internally in the region of the abdomen, but he appeared to be getting along well until a short time before his death. In the evening he talked with relatives and appeared to be interested in the newspaper account of the accident.

Now Charged With Murder—When William Schmidt of the town of Weston was arrested in Madison court Wednesday on a charge of manslaughter.

District Attorney R. P. Gorman made a motion to have the charge dismissed and as soon as the prisoner had been discharged a warrant charging him with the murder of George Cramer was served on him. It is alleged that Schmidt set a snare in his orchard in the town of Weston last August and George Cramer was shot and his death resulted a short time ago.

At the conclusion of his preliminary examination Judge Gorman bound the defendant over to circuit court for trial. He spent Wednesday night in jail because of the absence of Judge Reed from the city. The judge returned Thursday afternoon and it was expected bail would be arranged before evening.

Wausau Sun.

Caught a Live Deer—There is probably only one deer hunter in Portage county and in all probability in the entire state who started out in the quest of the pretty, fleet footed animal who can equal the record of Dennis Parks of the town of Plover, Mr. Parks made a successful hunt and was in the city last Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the First National bank and soon afterward started to join a party of hunters who were camped on the "Sandy" north and east of Plover.

He had proceeded to Knickerbocker and was back from there for the camp when a "spike horn" came into view. He immediately shot, the deer falling to the ground. Mr. Parks then ran to the deer and was about to cut its throat as all hunters do, when the animal regained its feet in an effort to get away. The hunter took hold of the deer and Parks finally being the victor. During the melee his coat was torn off, his trousers also badly torn and he suffered a few surface lacerations.

Over that may be, the little fawn is now confined in the basement of the Park's home, alive and well and will be kept for a time at least, probably for many years. This all occurred between 2 o'clock and about 11 o'clock at night, when Mr. Parks returned to his home in the town of Plover. The only injury sustained by the deer was a laceration on its hind leg, which was caused by the fall from Mr. Parks' rifle, and a serious hind ankle which no doubt occurred during the tussle he was having with his now proud captor. Mr. Parks will immediately inform the state game wardens' department and remit the 20 cent license which is required of all persons who desire to retain the possession of a live deer.

Stevens Point Journal.

More than 50,000 fourth class posts are getting ready to take the competitive examination which will admit the successful contestant to the classified service and protect him permanently against removal for partisan reasons. There must be at least three applicants for each office and from this list the postoffice department will name the postmaster.

People in Wisconsin, who for years have been told of the perfect conditions in the far west for the production of apples, will be surprised to read in the reports from North Dakota that "the loss from decay is much heavier than in the season of 1912." Many have supposed that there was no loss from worms and decay. With a forty per cent crop and heavier loss from worms the situation is not as rosy as many think. It is well that facts be known.

License for Plumbers

Hereafter all plumbers must pass a state examination and receive a license from the state board of health. The license fees are $2 for journeyman plumber, $10 for master and $40 for contracting plumber. Examinations will be held at the county seat of each county periodically after the organization of the state examining board.

Under the new law a contracting plumber must hire a master plumber as his own master. The law provides for the employment of a city plumbing inspector in cities of the first, second or third classes and for a state plumbing inspector.

MEETING OF WISCONSIN POTATO GROWERS.

The Wisconsin Potato Growers' held their annual convention at Rhinelander Nov. 20-21.

This convention certainly was another step in advance on potato production in Wisconsin. A large number of potato growers of Wisconsin were present. Various kinds of potatoes were on exhibit. A large number of prizes were awarded.

Program:
Thursday forenoon, November 20.
1. Report of Secretary.
2. Report of Treasurer.
3. General Business.
4. Election of Officers.

Thursday afternoon, November 20.
1. Seed selection and improvement in relation to commercial standards.

Prof. Wm. Stuart, field expert, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

General Discussion.
2. The market demand for improved standards.—E. P. Miller of Albert Miller Co. Chicago, Ill.

General Discussion.
3. The need of cooperation among growers in the selection of standard market varieties. (This subject was discussed by members in five minute reports from selected community centers in Wisconsin.)

Friday forenoon, November 21.
1. Potato diseases in relation to seed standards.—Prof. L. R. Jones, Pathologist, Wisconsin Experiment Station.

General Discussion.
2. Prof. Wm. Stuart, U. S. Department of Agriculture—Vine and Tuber characteristics of Standard Market Varieties of Potatoes.

General Discussion.
Friday afternoon, November 21.
1. Significance of Pure Seed Work in Wisconsin.—Dean H. L. Russell, Wisconsin Experiment Station.

2. Attiliations of the Horticultural Department to Potato Improvement in Wisconsin.—Prof. J. C. Moore, Horticulturist, Wisconsin Experiment Station.

3. Opportunities in Pure Seed Growing.—H. P. Kruger, Beaver Dam, Wis.

4. Potato Growing and Industrial Development. Which certainly was an interesting part of the convention.

Response and discussion led by—H. C. Cheyney, Assistant General Freight Agent, Chicago and North Western Railroad, Chicago, Ill.

(c). Secretary Campbell, Wisconsin Advancement Association.

(d). T. A. Hovestadt, Agricultural Commission Sou Line Railroad.

These were all interesting points on better potatoes in Wisconsin.

Huber Bros. placed a good line of potatoes on exhibit which the only exhibit from Wood County.

C. J. HICKEY, Alford, Wis.

BABCOCK.

The fair held here last Thursday under the auspices of the M. E. church aid society was a success both socially and financially. They cleared about $140. The donations from the First National Bank; $5 from the Wood County National Bank; $5 from the Grand Rapids Brewing Co.; and a large lamp from the Johnson & Hill Co., and a rocker from J. R. Ragan.

Rev. L. R. Peckham and wife of Grand Rapids were visitors at the fair on Thursday.

On Wednesday afternoon about thirty-five neighbors and friends of Mrs. C. C. Stout gave her a genuine old fashion surprise party, it being her 25th birthday. Mrs. Hannah Akey, Mrs. F. P. Daly, Mrs. Dickson and Mrs. Hayes of Grand Rapids and Mrs. Walter Dickson of Rudolph and Mrs. Natter of Phillips were the out of town guests.

G. C. Stout is away on a business trip in Illinois and Iowa.

David Levin is spending his Thanksgiving in the southern part of the state among relatives.

Mrs. Jas. McLaughlin was calling on old friends in Grand Rapids on Tuesday.

S. Griffith is spending the week with his son and family in Milwaukee, S. D.

Mrs. J. W. Cochran and sons arrived in the village on Wednesday to spend the winter with Mrs. J. E. Ingham.

Mrs. Wm. Charles and little daughter left for their home in Mather after spending a week at the home of her mother Mrs. S. Griffith.

Mrs. L. P. Isbore is in the village packing up her goods, she will spend Thanksgiving in Merrill and probably will spend the balance of the winter in Grand Rapids.

The Catholic ladies aid society met Mrs. Wm. Bowden on Wednesday last.

Miss Agnes Miller is spending the week in Milwaukee and Milton.

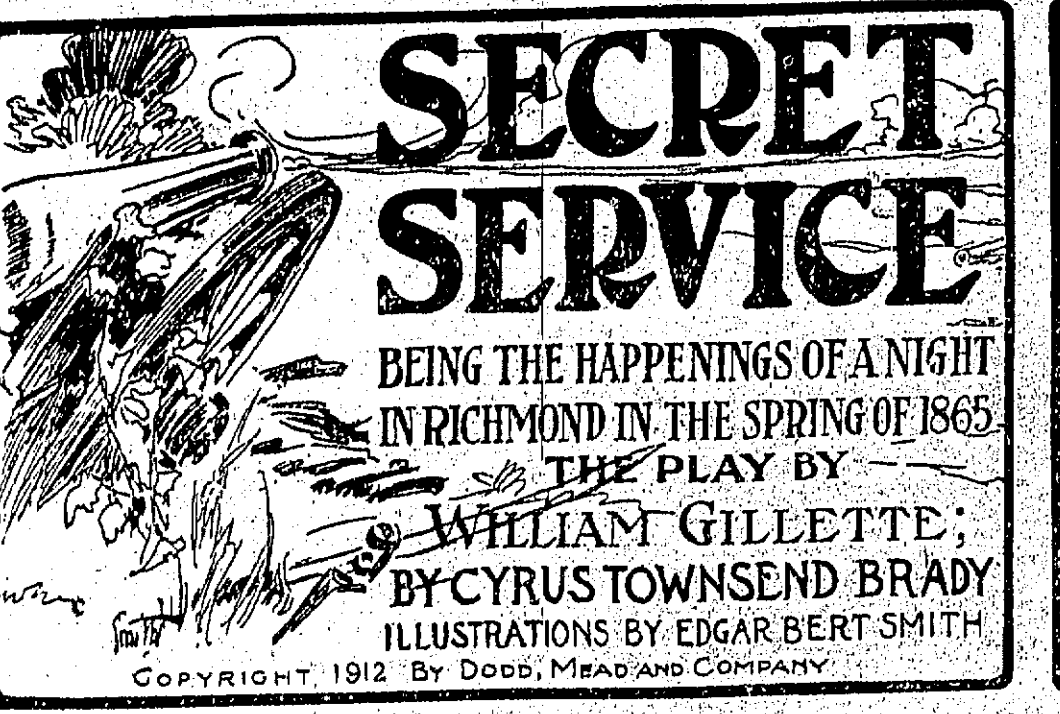

Mrs. A. Zeiling and daughter Esther are visiting relatives in New Lisbon this week.

The scholars of the schools here are putting on a few exercises suitable to Thanksgiving time, at the town hall on Wednesday afternoon.

M. F. Ward and wife are expected here Wednesday to spend a week at the home of L. Ward.

SPARE THE CROW
"Be kind to the crow," is the injunction issued by the Department of Agriculture. The crow has been found by experts of the biological survey to be a friend of the farmer.

After a careful study of the habits and the examination of a large number of stomachs, the department experts have reached the conclusion that the crow consumes about grasshoppers, cutworms, white grubs and other injurious insects to make him highly valuable to farmers. There is, however, one bad habit which the crow has and that is the destruction of young birds and birds' eggs; but this trait is outweighed by the good the bird is doing for the farmer in the destruction of worms

SYNOPSIS.

Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and another is being held in prison. She is determined to join the army if her father consents. He is an old man and she is an old woman. She is determined to join the army if her father consents. He is an old man and she is an old woman. She is determined to join the army if her father consents. of the room, and started toward the door; they would bring him back that way, and she could see him again. "Wilfred, dear," asked Caroline, "what are they going to do?" "Shoot him," "When?" "Now?" "Where?" "Out in the street." Caroline's low exclamation of pity struck a responsive chord in Wilfred's heart. He nodded gravely, and bit his lips. He did not feel particularly happy over the situation, evidently, but the conversation was interrupted by the entrance of the men. They came into the room in double file. Thorne walked easily between them. They entered the room by the door, marched down it, came back, and ranged themselves opposite the stacks of arms. "Halt!" cried the sergeant. "Right face! Take arms! Carry arms! Left face! Forward—march!" Edith had not taken her eyes off Thorne since he entered the room. As the men moved to carry out their last order, the girl awoke to her surroundings. "Wait," she said. "Who is in command?" "I am, miss," answered the sergeant. "I'd like to speak to the—the—prisoner," continued Edith. "I'm sorry, miss," answered the sergeant respectfully, but abruptly; "but we haven't the time."

"Only a word, sergeant," pleaded the girl, stopping close to him, and laying her hand on his arm. The sergeant looked at her a moment. What he saw in her eyes touched his very soul. "Right face! Fall out the prisoner!" "Right face!" Thorne stepped out in front of the ranks. "Now, miss," said the sergeant, "be quick about it."

"Not," said Wilfred sternly. "Oh, Wilfred!" cried Caroline, laying her hand on his arm. "Let her speak to him, let her say goodbye."

There was an instant's pause. Wilfred looked from Caroline's flushed, eager face, to Edith's pale one. After all, what was the harm? He nodded his head, but no more moved. It was the sergeant who broke the silence. "The lady," he said, looking at Thorne, and pointing at Edith. As he spoke, he added another order. "March, take your squad and guard the windows. Prisoner, you can go over to the side of the room."

The sergeant's purpose was plain. It would give Edith Varney an opportunity to say what she had to say to Thorne in a low voice if she chose, without the possibility of being overheard.

"One of the servants," began the girl in a low, utterly passionate and expressionless voice, "Jonas, has taken the bullets from the guns. If you will drop when they fire, you can escape with your life."

In exactly the same level, almost monotonous voice, Thorne whispered a pertinent question: "Shall I do this for you?"

"It is nothing to me," said the woman quietly, and might God forgive her, she prayed, for that falsehood.

Thorne looked at her, his soul in his eyes. If her face had been carved from marble, it could not have been more expressionless and indifferent. He could not know how wildly her heart was beating beneath that exterior. Well, she had nothing to her. There was no use living any longer. She did not care.

"Were you responsible in any way for it?" he asked.

The girl shook her head and turned away without looking at him. She had not the least idea of what he was about to do. Not one man in a thousand would have done it. Perhaps if he went to his death in some quiet way, he might redeem himself in her eyes, had flashed into Thorne's mind, as he turned to the guard.

"Sergeant," he said, saluting. He spoke in a clear, cool, most indifferent way. "You had better take a look at the rifles of your command. I understand that they have been tampered with."

"What the hell!" cried the sergeant, seizing a piece from the nearest man. He snatched open the breech-plug and drew out the cartridge and examined it. Someone had bitten off the bullet! He saw everything clearly.

of the room which is not exposed to shaking or jarring from the street. Sprinkle pulverized chalk over the water.

Then upon the surface of this coating make, with powdered charcoal, a straight black line, say an inch or two in length. Having made this little black mark with the charcoal powder on the surface of the contents of the bowl, lay down upon the floor, close to the bowl, a stick of soap, or other straight object so that it will be exactly parallel with the mark. If the line happens to be parallel with a crack in the floor or with any stationary object in the room this will serve as well.

Leave the bowl undisturbed for a few hours and then observe the position of the black mark with reference to the object that it was parallel with. It will be found to have moved about, and to have moved, from east to west—that is to say, in the direction opposite to that of the movement of the earth on its axis. The earth, in simply revolving, has carried the water, and everything else in the bowl around with it, but the powder has been left behind a little. The line will always be found to have moved from east to west, which proves that everything else has moved the other way.

His Misfortune. "It ought not to be hard to detect smallpox."

"Why so?" "Because when a man has it he is so easily spotted."

CHAPTER XX.

The Last Reprieve.

General Randolph was evidently in a great hurry. Public affairs of great moment pressed upon him, and it was an evidence of the interest he took in the case of Captain Thorne that he gave him even a minute of his valuable time. He had come on horseback, and everybody could see that he was anxious to get through with his appointed task and get away.

"Ah, sergeant," he said, answering the latter's salute as he brought the guard to attention, and then his eye fell upon Captain Thorne. "You have the prisoner, have you?"

"Just taking him out, sir," answered the sergeant, saluting again. "To prison?"

"No, sir." "Where then?"

"To execute the sentence of the court, sir."

"Oh!" exclaimed the general, looking hard at the sergeant. "He has had his trial, has he?"

But Arrelsford, who chafed at thus being left out of the game, now stepped over and took up the burden of the conversation before the sergeant could reply.

"We have done everything according to regulation, sir," he said, saluting in a rather cavalier manner. He did not like General Randolph. If it had not been for his interference, the affair would have been settled long ago, and he still cherished a grudge against the latter for having arrested a man so important as the trusted lieutenant.

"The agent of the secret service," "The findings have gone to the secretary."

"Ah!" said General Randolph blandly. He did not like Mr. Arrelsford either. He did not like Mr. Arrelsford either.

"And he was found guilty, I presume?" "Certainly, sir."

"And what are you going to do with him?" "There is no time for a hanging now, and the court has ordered him shot."

"Oh, indeed. And what were the charges?" "Conspiracy against our government and the success of our arms, by sending a false and misleading dispatch containing forged orders, was the particular specification."

"Well," said General Randolph, "I regret that the court has been misled."

"What!" cried Arrelsford, in great surprise. "The testimony was very plain."

"Yes, indeed, sir," interposed the sergeant. "Nevertheless," returned the general, "the man is not guilty of that charge. The dispatch was not sent."

Dogs and Music.

Dogs as a rule like music. But it must be secured, owing to a lack of developed nervous system, which renders them such faithful watchers, also makes keen and high pitched sounds extremely painful to them. Thus the high notes of a trumpet or even of a violin are torturing to the dog, who will howl under the influence of the sound.

On the other hand, soft music tones undoubtedly give many dogs pleasure. Cats, also, like many other animals, are fond of music. But no animals appear to suffer so much from keen, harsh sounds as dogs, and more in smooth, soft harmonies. A soothing "diapason movement" is the kind of music most agreeable to the intelligent dog.

Good Kinder.

In some sections kindlings are very hard to secure, owing to a lack of kindling of all kinds. An inexpensive kinder may be made as follows: Take to one pound of resin three ounces of tallow, and while still hot after melting mix with fine sawdust, and mold in small pieces about one inch square. One pair will start a fire in the stove.

MEETING CLOSES WITH ELECTION

Annual Session of Christian Endeavor Union Ends.

WESTPHAL NAMED PRESIDENT

Newly Elected Officers Are Installed by Rev. E. T. Farrill at Final Session of Convention in Oconomowoc.

Madison.—The Nineteenth annual convention of the Christian Endeavor union of the eastern district of Wisconsin closed in Oconomowoc.

The newly elected officers were installed by Rev. E. T. Farrill, state field secretary, and a song service followed. Stanley T. Fowler, Milwaukee, president of the union for four years, made a short address and the new president, Edward Westphal of Waukegan, also spoke.

The address of the evening was given by Rev. Mr. Farrill, who spoke on "The Crisis," and the need of the best manhood and womanhood in the coming affairs of the world. The newly elected officers are: President, Edward Westphal, Waukegan; vice-president, Miss Lovinia Vanderpool, Mukwonago; treasurer, Miss Edna Mukwonago; secretary, Miss Edna Mukwonago; and the need of the best manhood and womanhood in the coming affairs of the world.

The last day was given over to the religious services, and a special service for children was held, in charge of Miss Matheson, Neenah, head of the state junior work. Miss Gull, dean of women at Carroll college, Waukegan, spoke on the "Quest of Young Womanhood" at a meeting, and a special meeting for the men and boys was held at the M. E. church, and was addressed by Vinton M. Foss, C. E. Houtkamp, Milwaukee, Edward Westphal, Waukegan, and Dr. F. C. Rogers, Oconomowoc.

Honor System at Waupun.

That the "honor system," adopted by Warden Edward Allen of the Joliet (Ill.) state penitentiary has been in use in Wisconsin for more than a year was the statement in an interview by Warden Woodward of the Waupun prison. Warden Woodward, before his appointment by Governor McGovern to the head of the Waupun prison, occupied a Methodist Episcopal pulpit, and probably enjoys the distinction of being the only "parson warden" in the United States.

Woodward said that the "honor system" as applied to road camps had been in use in Wisconsin, but that it might be attempted during the next summer.

"We have had no experience with the honor system as applied to road work of convicts," said Warden Woodward. "We may try that out next year. If any county asks for convict camps, I expect to visit convict road camps in other states within the next few weeks and get a better understanding of the methods."

"However, the honor system has been used for a long time along other lines in the Wisconsin prison. Since July, 1912, trustees have been sent to the prison farm, a distance of more than a mile, without guards. From twelve to fifteen men in the 'farm gang' and they work from 5:00 to 7:00 or 8:00 p. m. in mudsummer, in field and garden. Other men have worked in the stone quarry and at digging ditches without being guarded."

"We have had no violation of our honor system in all the time it has been in operation," said Warden Woodward. "In fact, we have dealt with the best class of prisoners, and it is not left to the discretion of the warden to select the men to go to them, and the same rule will apply."

Muscle Students Increasing.

The enrollment of the music school at the university has increased amazingly the past few years.

There are 35 regulars, as against 60 last year, and 39 freshmen compared to 22 in 1912.

Two hundred and ninety-two students from other colleges elect music courses, as against 337 last year. The total enrollment is 377, a gain of 27 per cent. over the 1912 enrollment.

Thirty-two Ask for Parole.

The state board of control will meet at Waupun to consider applications for parole that have been filed by 32 prisoners. A member of the board said that John F. Dietz had recently attempted to get a hearing under the law passed to compensate prisoners, but he had been advised that no relief could be granted until he had been pardoned by the governor.

Labor Demand Is Less.

Demand for labor is falling off and unemployment is increasing, according to reports received by the Wisconsin state industrial commission from the state employment offices.

Help wanted at the Milwaukee free employment office decreased 20 per cent. in October, 1913, as compared with October, 1912. Applications for work increased almost 70 per cent. Outside of Milwaukee the decrease in demand has been slight, but the increase in the applications for work has been very great.

Millions of Tobacco Growers.

It is roughly estimated that between five and seven millions of dollars will be paid to tobacco growers of Wisconsin for the 1913 crop. The farmers who received 15 cents for their crop will realize something like 1,500 pounds per acre. The flurry of purchasing which swept the local buyers with small capital off their feet three weeks ago has abated and prices in consequence have dropped. The weather has been exceptionally good for curing and there is little shed burn reported.

Sunday School Meet Closes.

The fifty-third annual convention of the Wisconsin Sunday school association closed in the city of Sheboygan with the election of officers after the most successful meeting in the organization's history.

Following were the men honored: President, F. S. Shattuck, Neenah; vice-president, Carroll Kung, Sheboygan; treasurer, J. N. Bergstrom, Neenah; and secretary, W. W. Hughes, Fond du Lac. The next meeting will be held at Grand Rapids.

WISCONSIN STATE NEWS

Baraboo—Arthur Huebing, former city clerk of Reedsburg, has been arrested, charged with a shortage of funds.

Green Bay.—Mrs. Theresa Vanderbush, who spent the last 40 years in bed, died at the age of eighty-three years.

Wausau.—Henry Goertz, thirteen years old, who was struck by an automobile driven by Dr. D. T. Jones of this city, died.

Appleton.—Officers, first sergeants, buglers and bandmen in the Wisconsin National Guard are to be armed with automatic pistols.

Brillion.—When a gas explosion in the Brillion iron works damaged part of the building, four men were injured. One of them may lose the sight of an eye.

Baraboo.—Mr. and Mrs. Leander B. Wheeler of this city have just celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. Their ten children were present.

Sheboygan.—August Bucholtz, aged fifty-four, threw himself in front of a Northwestern train here, and his head was nearly severed. He leaves several children.

Sheboygan.—After repeated threats to kill himself, August Bucholtz, fifty-four years old, father of several children, committed suicide by throwing himself under a Northwestern train here.

Menominee.—Rev. C. F. Niles, pastor of the Unitarian church of this city, received the appointment of membership in the board of visitors of the University of Wisconsin for four years.

Racine.—Rev. Charles Sparrow Nickerson, D. D., for eight years pastor of the First Presbyterian church, but for ten years pastor of a Marietta (O.) church, will again be head of the Racine congregation.

Couderay.—Demars, said to be the son of Park Falls, was found dead in the woods three miles north of Praper, this county. He had been hunting and from appearances his gun was accidentally discharged, the bullet striking him in the head and killing him.

Madison.—The Wisconsin College of Agriculture will have exhibits of prize sheep at the international live stock exposition at Chicago next month as follows: Twelve Shropshires, twelve Hampshire, two Oxford, five Southdowns, nine Cheviots, five Ramboulls and fourteen Romanys.

Antigo.—The body of Anton Janaszak, thirty-one years old, a telephone operator at Summit Lake, who drowned, was recovered after a search of three days. Janaszak went skating, saying to a friend: "If I don't come back you'll know what has happened to me."

Ironridge.—Fire supposed to be of incendiary origin destroyed the barn and contents on a farm two miles north of here, owned by the Northwestern Iron company, and occupied by Hubert Voss, consuming five horses, Lobs, $4,000. This is the second fire of this nature within a week.

Neenah.—That not enough grapes have been raised in this section of the state to supply the demand was made plain when express company buyers were unable to secure contracts for 1,400 birds to give away to their employees on Thanksgiving. All birds in this section have been contracted for in bulk.

Grand Rapids.—One of the survivors of the crew of the Fred G. Hartwell, the vessel which sank in Lake Superior near the mouth of the Marquette during the recent storm, was Ernest Kurz, a young man from this city. Mrs. A. A. Arndt, who is a brother of Kurz, told of his narrow escape from drowning and of the untold hardships experienced by the survivors who clung to the lifeboats until rescued.

Florence.—Louis Yehle, electrician for the Florence Iron company, owners of the Florence and Ernst mines, was electrocuted at the transformer station of the mine. Yehle went as usual to charge the lighting apparatus and at the same time he came in contact with either a magnet or live wire. This makes the third death by electricity in this section since the power line was built a year ago. Yehle is survived by a wife and five children.

Kenosha.—Announcements were received here of the marriage of Miss Eva Theelen, former well known Kenosha young woman and a daughter of Charles Theelen of Oak Park, and Wendell Klumlein, which was celebrated at Milwaukee, last night. Both Mr. and Mrs. Klumlein are graduates of Lawrence university at Appleton, and they went to India as missionary teachers. Mrs. Klumlein recently made a trip of more than 18,000 miles, joining her husband at Bombay just before the marriage. All of the East Indian customs were followed in the marriage ceremonies. They will reside at Moradabad.

Neenah.—L. J. Somers and Henry Fitzgibbons, attorneys, came to blows in the court of Justice Baird while arguing a larceny case here. Alderman George Neft of this city acted as mediator. Somers was representing the plaintiff, Mrs. George Thebe, and Fitzgibbons was counsel for the defendant, George Thebe, who was charged with larceny.

Wausau.—Henry Gierz, aged thirteen, who, while riding a bicycle collided with an auto driven by Dr. D. T. Jones, died of internal injuries.

Beloit.—As a solution for the troublesome question of expensive graduating gowns, senators of Beloit high school are considering caps and gowns similar to those worn by college graduates. This custom would bring about uniformity, and thus no distinction would be drawn between the richer and poorer members of the class.

Janeville.—Jack Lee and Irving Allison attempted to brave the ice does on Rock river with disastrous results. A hole was torn in the side of their launch, which sank. Both swam some distance from shore.

Marinette.—The county board appropriated $20,000 for a tuberculosis sanatorium and $5,000 toward a county fair. Business men of the county expect to organize a company capitalized at $25,000 to give Marinette county the finest fair grounds in the state. Senator Isaac Stephenson has agreed to permit the use of his Riverside park, a 40-acre site, with a half-mile track, free for a term of years.

Beloit.—Three hundred Masons, including members of the Wisconsin grand lodge, were here for the formal dedication of the new $75,000 Masonic temple.

Patents to State Inventors.

Burton S. Aikman, Chicago, Ill., assignor to National Brake & Electric company, Milwaukee, pneumatic governor; Peter J. Anderson, Stoughton, Wis., scatterer; Romeo A. Beaudette, Chippewa Falls, Wis., scatterer; Charles W. Cook, Milwaukee, life raft; George Corbin, Racine, rotary cutting off saw and the like; Frank P. Marlowe, Antigo, axle strapping knuckle; George S. Parker, Janesville, fountain pen; John F. Pribnow, Mellan, sawage chaper; Alfred H. Wadewitz, Racine, shape lock.

WHY NOT THE BEEFSTEAK?

Theater Goer Who Did Not Care for Candy Thought He Was Within His Rights.

When the curtain went down after the first act, a man in the seventh row took a package from under the seat and, opening it up, disclosed a large beefsteak, a knife, a fork and a plate. He started to eat it in the customary manner when one of the ushers tapped him on the shoulder and said:

"Pardon me, sir, but we don't permit that here."

"Why not?"

"Did anybody ever do it before? You'd better find out what the rules are."

The usher was nonplussed and went away to get the manager.

"What do you mean, sir, by eating that beefsteak here, you will have to get out."

The man got up and proceeded to go out, doing up his beefsteak carefully.

"It is all right, of course," he said, "as long as you object, but—"

He waved his arm around where numerous young ladies were gazing themselves on candy.

"You don't object to those people doing what they want. I don't care for candy myself, and considering how rotten your play is, I thought my favorite food might sustain me through the next few acts. Good afternoon!"—Life.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONY.

The Rev. Edmund Heslop of Wilkeson, Pa., states that during the year, his limbs and feet were swollen and puffed. He had heart trouble, was dizzy and exhausted at the least exertion. Hands and feet were cold and he had such a dragging sensation across the joints that it was difficult to move.

After using Dr. Dods Kidney Pills, the swelling disappeared and he felt himself again. He says he has been benefited and blessed by the use of Dods Kidney Pills. Several months later he wrote: I have not changed my faith in your remedy since the above statement was authorized. Correspond with Rev. E. Heslop about this wonderful remedy.

A Good Work.

Edith was light-hearted and merry over everything. Nothing appeared to her seriously. So, she went to her mother's room, to invite a very serious person to dinner, and he was placed next the light-hearted girl. Everything went well until she asked him:

"You speak of everybody having a mission. What is yours?"

"My mission," said the person, "is to save young men."

"Good," replied the girl, "I'm glad to meet you. I wish you'd save one for me."

Natural—Historically Correct.

"No adults admitted," interposed the stage-door keeper as the frenzied mother tried to break in on the children's fancy dress ball.

"But I must go in. My little girl's in there, and she's forgotten part of her costume. She has gone on as a butterfly without her wings. I want to put the wings on her."

"Can't help it, mum; your orders is to let no adult pass. You'll have to let your little girl go as a caterpillar."

To Endorse Tuberculosis Day.

Requests for endorsement and approval of National Tuberculosis day, December 7, have been sent to President Wilson, to almost every governor, to hundreds of mayors, to leading church dignitaries and to other prominent men.

Partly by the late year ex-President Taft, who is a Roosevelt, Cardinal Farley, about a dozen governors, and a large number of mayors and others endorsed this movement.

Human Nature.

The charities of the late Timothy D. Sullivan made him beloved in New York's East side.

But these charities also gave Mr. Sullivan an insight into human nature, and he would sometimes say with a wry smile:

"Give a poor man help and he'll love you for a week. At the end of that time he'll hate you because you don't give him more help."

Not Getting Anywhere.

"What sort of platform is this candidate running on?"

"I think it's a treadmill."

Concomitant.

"His stories are well received."

"And so are his cigars."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

FAMILY OF FIVE

All Drink Coffee From Infancy.

It is a common thing in this country to see whole families growing up with nervous systems weakened by coffee drinking.

That is because many parents do not realize that coffee contains a drug—caffeine—which causes the trouble. (The same drug is found in tea.)

"There are five children in my family," writes an Iowa mother, "all of whom drank coffee from infancy up to two years ago."

"My husband and I had heart trouble and were advised to quit coffee. We did so and began to use Postum. We now are doing without medicine and are entirely relieved of heart trouble."

"Our eleven-year-old boy had a weak digestion from birth, and yet always craved coffee. He was given coffee. When we changed to Postum he liked it and we gave him all he wanted. He has been restored to health by Postum and still likes it."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for the Little Book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms: Regular Postum—must be boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in cup of hot water, and with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

Prove the World Revolves

Simple Experiment, Outlined by German Publication, Will Convince the Most Skeptical.

Perhaps a no more accurate proof that the earth is constantly revolving can be given than that recently published in a German paper which gives the following directions for substantiating the same:

Take a good-sized bowl, fill it nearly full of water and place it upon the floor of a room which is not exposed to shaking or jarring from the street. Sprinkle pulverized chalk over the water.

Then upon the surface of this coating make, with powdered charcoal, a straight black line, say an inch or two in length. Having made this little black mark with the charcoal powder on the surface of the contents of the bowl, lay down upon the floor, close to the bowl, a stick of soap, or other straight object so that it will be exactly parallel with the mark. If the line happens to be parallel with a crack in the floor or with any stationary object in the room this will serve as well.

Leave the bowl undisturbed for a few hours and then observe the position of the black mark with reference to the object that it was parallel with. It will be found to have moved about, and to have moved, from east to west—that is to say, in the direction opposite to that of the movement of the earth on its axis. The earth, in simply revolving, has carried the water, and everything else in the bowl around with it, but the powder has been left behind a little. The line will always be found to have moved from east to west, which proves that everything else has moved the other way.

HEALTH

According to excellent authorities, there are 100,000 cases of blindness in the United States. Estimated that Wisconsin has a proportionate share of this number as it is not doubt, a New York commission which investigated one thousand cases affirmed that one-third of them were preventable by investigation in Wisconsin would arrive at the same conclusion.

One of the great causes of blindness is infection of the baby's eyes during birth. Leading oculists state that one-fourth of all blindness is due to this infection. Such blindness is absolutely preventable. Indeed, if the laws of the state are complied with, all cases of this nature in Wisconsin will henceforth be prevented.

The preventive measures are exceedingly simple, merely requiring the use of harmless eye drops immediately after the birth of the infant. To prevent any oversight which might be responsible for a loss of eye sight, parents should positively know that this precaution has been taken by the attendant.

The existence of 2,500 blind citizens constitutes a drag anchor upon public and family resources and prosperity. Public relief is almost inevitable. Modern competition is such that it is a healthy man's job to keep ahead of his creditors. Few handicapped individuals can be expected to do so.

Blindness is incurable. The only hope is prevention. To prevent the mass of individual cases, each individual case must be prevented.

NEWS ITEMS FROM NEARBY PLACES

Killed by Auto.—Henry Goertz, aged thirteen years, a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Goertz, 702 Maple street, was fatally injured Thursday morning when his bicycle collided with an automobile driven by Dr. D. T. Jones. The accident was unavoidable. Dr. Jones and Dr. J. R. Bryant were going west on Clinton street and the boy was going east. At First avenue the box car obstructed the view and the corner. One wheel of the automobile partly passed over the boy's body and injured him internally. He died the next morning. Coroner H. M. Praxley made an investigation, which resulted in the complete exoneration of Dr. Jones. The boy was injured internally in the region of the abdomen, but he appeared to be getting along well until a short time before his death. In the evening he talked with relatives and appeared to be interested in the newspaper account of the accident. —Wausau Sun.

Now Charged With Murder.—When William Schmidt of the town of Weston was arraigned in municipal court Wednesday on a charge of manslaughter District Attorney E. P. Gorman made a motion to have the charge dismissed and as soon as the prisoner had been discharged a warrant was taken for his arrest. Schmidt is charged with the murder of George Cramer who was shot in the chest by Schmidt on the 11th of August in the town of Weston. Last August and George Cramer was shot and his death resulted a short time ago. At the conclusion of his preliminary examination Judge Marchetti bound the defendant over to circuit court for trial. He spent Wednesday night in jail because of the absence of Judge Hall from the city. The judge returned Thursday afternoon and it was expected hall would be arraigned before evening. —Wausau Sun.

Caught a Live Deer.—There is probably only one deer hunter in Portage county and in all probability in the entire state who started out in the quest of the pretty, fleet footed animal who can equal the record of Dennis Parks of the town of Plover. Mr. Parks resides near Meadham station and was in the city last Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the First National bank and soon afterward started to join a party of hunters who were camped on the "Sandy" north and east of Knowlton. He had proceeded to Knowlton and was headed from there over the camp where a "spike horn" came into view. He immediately shot, the fawn falling to the ground. Mr. Parks then ran to the deer and was about to cut its throat as all of its feet in an effort to get away. The hunter took hold of the deer and Parks finally being the victor. During the melee his coat was torn off, his trousers also badly torn and he suffered a severe bruise on his hip. He over the fact that the little fawn is now confined in the basement of the Park's home, alive and well and will be kept for a time at least, probably for many years. This all occurred between 2 o'clock and 11 o'clock of last night when Mr. Parks returned to his home in the town of Plover. The only injury sustained by the deer was a loosened horn, which was caused by the run from Mr. Parks' rifle, and a strained hind ankle which no doubt occurred during the tussle he was having with his now proud captor. Mr. Parks will immediately inform the state game warden's department and remit them the license which is required of all persons who desire to retain the possession of a live deer. —Stevens Point Journal.

Entertained Her Friends.—Mrs. F. J. Natwick entertained a party of friends Monday evening at a Miscellaneous Shower for Miss Ruby Natwick. The evening was very pleasantly spent and Miss Natwick received many remembrances from her friends.

J. E. Russell of Oshkosh, representing the Remington typewriter company, spent several days in the city the past week looking after some business matters.
